Dictatorial Rule Formed to Save Tottering Franc

Broad Powers Assured Bouisson to Arrest Flight of Gold.

Cabinet Pledged To Act Swiftly

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Paris (Saturday), June 1.—A new coalition cabinet, pledged to save the franc, rose today under the premiership of Fernand Bouisson, virtually assured of the dictatorial financial powers in quest of which the government of Pierre-Etienne Flandin collapsed.

Bouisson, veteran ringmaster of many parliamentary debates, completed his ministry early today after drawing consent to his program from the various political parties because of the national emergency.

Bouisson, who ruled the Chamber of Deputies for nine years as presiding officer, will read the ministerial declaration, but will present no arguments and will conduct no debate, the parties being represented as agreeing to grant him decree powers.

Pledged to Act Quickly.

The bearded, 60-year-old leader was pledged to act quickly, with the outward flow of gold undiminished, to avert the panic which Flandin had predicted if drastic remedies were delayed.

Henri Roy, who was listed to be minister of agriculture, was expected to accept the post, but Bouisson was unable to reach him last night. Roy was minister of public works under Flandin.

Bouisson's is the ninety-eighth cabinet in the Third Republic's 65 years of existence. It is the ninth cabinet in Lebrun's three years and three weeks of presidency.

Flandin's cabinet lasted one week less than seven months. The average cabinet life since 1871 has been three days less than eight months, the average since the World War five and a half months.

Fear of riots solidified political sentiment behind the premier-designate and he managed to put together in short order the coalition support he had demanded as the price of his surrender of the presidency of the chamber to take the premiership.

List Includes Herriot.

Premier and minister of interior—Fernand Bouisson.
Foreign affairs—Pierre Laval.
Finance—Maurice Palmade.
Commerce—Laurent Eynac.
War—Gen. Louis Felix Maurin.
Navy—Francois Pietri.
Air—Gen. Victor Denain.
Justice—Georges Henot.
Labor—Louis Frossard.
Pensions—Camille Perfetti.
Colonies—Louis Rollin.
Communications—Georges Mandel.
Public works—Joseph Paganon.
Merchant marine—William Bertrand.
Agriculture—Henri Roy.
Education—Mario Roustan.
Public health—Ernest LaFont.
Undersecretary to the premier—Pierre Cathala.

Minister of Merchant Marine William Betrand was aboard the Normandie on her maiden voyage to New York, and was a hold over from the Flandin cabinet, but it was considered likely he would be replaced on his return.

Cabinet Increased by One.

The new cabinet is composed of 22 men instead of Flandin's 21. It has 11 hold overs.

There are four senators in the cabinet—Caillaux, Laval, Roy and Roustan—three non-parliamentarians—Petain, Maurin and Denain—and 15 deputies.

Bouisson gained the backing of the radical Socialists by promising any emergency financial powers granted him by Parliament would be used only to protect the franc and stimulate business.

It was Flandin's demand for similar semi-dictatorial powers to "save the franc" that brought his government dramatic defeat in the Chamber of Deputies early yesterday, the deputies voting non-confidence in his ministry 353 to 202.

Meanwhile an unending golden stream, representative of the flight from the franc, still flowed out of the vaults of the Bank of France and the question of devaluation of the currency remained an open issue.

Gold shipments since the rush of withdrawals started March 29 total about 13,000,000,000 francs ($858,000,-

Eden Approves Air Locarno; Parity a Basis

By the Associated Press.

London, May 31.—Great Britain today officially voiced willingness to sign an "Air Locarno" providing air parity among western Europe's "Big Four"—Britain, France, Italy and Germany—and binding them to instantaneous joint action against an aerial aggressor.

The important announcement was made to the House of Commons by Capt. Anthony Eden, brilliant young lord privy seal, convincing many listeners Eden would succeed Sir John Simon as foreign secretary in the cabinet shake-up expected early next month.

Simon, speaking at the outset of the Commons debate, reviewed the history of recent negotiations for an air pact, only hinting at the definite pronouncements which Eden made later.

Speaking forcefully, the 37-year-old ace diplomat said:

"Yardstick Is Parity."

"The yardstick for the collective security of the four great powers is that of parity."

It would be impractical to have an air limitation agreement, he said, without an accompanying "Air Locarno" to guard against aerial aggression.

Earlier Simon, declaring "there is no serious difference between the powers concerned," suggested the time was about ripe for "more intimately connected exchange" of views, confirmed officially Britain's receipt of Germany's air pact proposals and disclosed three essential principles of the draft Britain has submitted to other signatories of the original Locarno—the "big four" and Belgium. These were:

1. The pact should be along the lines of the Anglo-French declaration of February 3, which contemplated mutual guarantees against unprovoked aggression from the air.

2. Agreement on limitation of air strength, since "negotiations concerning levels of air strength are an essential part of an air pact."

3. The outlawing of indiscriminate bombing from the air.

Prepared to Act.

"We are prepared to do our part," Sir John said, "and I am very glad to read statements in Adolf Hitler's speech (to the German Reichstag) which show the German government is also prepared to play its part in discussing and, I very much hope, in successfully negotiating not only an air pact but also an agreement for limitation which would be an immense relief."

Hitler's speech also held out hope

20,000 Killed As Temblors Ravage India

British Air Garrison and Civilian Police Suffer Heavy Casualties.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Karachi, India, May 31.—Three tremendous rumbling earth shocks shattered the northwest frontier city of Quetta early today, killing an estimated 20,000 Europeans and natives.

It was feared the death toll would go much higher with receipt of reports from outlying districts, especially that between Quetta and Kalat.

Tonight many of the dead still lay buried beneath debris, at which exhausted soldiers and volunteer relief workers were frantically tearing.

Unnumbered thousands were left homeless, destitute and panic-stricken when the three successive quakes, the most violent lasting 60 seconds, racked their homes to pieces about them.

Rescuers Exhausted.

Scores of British and Indian troops dropped in the streets from sheer exhaustion after unbroken hours of digging into debris, succoring the uncounted injured and organizing relief activities.

One relief train left Karachi tonight. Another was being prepared. Aboard it were physicians, nurses, railway men, medical supplies and food. Messages from Quetta, sent by wireless because land lines were wrecked, said food was enough for several days.

Few fresh details as to the extent of the catastrophe were forthcoming owing to the destruction of the Quetta wireless station. Messages were being sent by way of Sibi, 70 miles from Quetta.

Meager advices said 50 Europeans and 152 Indians injured in the quake had been extricated from the ruins by military rescue parties tonight and given hospital treatment.

Districts Razed.

Other reports said the Basu and Moti districts, the most thickly populated parts of Quetta, were razed. These sections were inhabited by Sindhis and various floating parts of the population.

Still other unconfirmed reports reaching Karachi said the main bazaar on the Bruce Road to Quetta was afire. A severe storm followed the quake.

The important frontier post of Chaman, 60 miles northwest of Quetta, was reported wiped out, as was the town of Kalat.

Two Royal Air Force planes were scheduled to take off in the morning to assist in relief work in the devastated area.

Quetta's normal military and civil population of over 60,000 had been swelled by thousands come from the lowland to escape the intense summer heat so that death, when it struck in the darkness of early morning, had so many more targets.

A wireless message from Quetta, which gave the first complete estimate of the dead, placed the figure at 20,000 or more, although earlier unofficial estimates were as high as 30,000.

Hundreds Injured.

The message set the injured only "in the hundreds."

Hard hit was the British royal air force at Quetta, 44 of whose garrison died as the air force barracks were demolished. Twenty to 30 more were reported missing. The victims included at least three white children.

The main military barracks escaped the worst of the damage and soldiers were bearing the brunt of the relief work, for most of the town's police men died.

Reported killed were Meredith Jones, of the British political department, his wife and her mother, Mrs. Bradford, an irrigation engineer named Francis and his wife.

The dead aviators were said to include Flying Officer Charles Paylor.

Sir Norman Carter, agent of the governor general and his entourage escaped death only through quick-wittedness. When the first rumble was heard, Carter warned all his staff to run for the open. They did just as the building crashed about

J. M. Ellison, 'Lost' 5 Days, Found Slain

Virginia Wood Yields Body of Estate's Manager.

Brother of D. C. Woman Believed Victim of Hitch-Hiker.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

A Staff Correspondent.

Richmond, Va., May 31.—The body of J. M. Ellison, 57, was found in woods 25 miles northwest of here today, and tonight Virginia police and Federal agents were searching for his murderer, believed to be a hitch-hiker.

Ellison, manager of Brandon, famous colonial estate on the James River, had been missing since Sunday afternoon, when he left Washington.

Virginia authorities today leaned to this theory.

Shot Through Head.

A bullet hole was found in Ellison's head, and Coroner W. N. Holman, of Goochland, said he apparently had been shot from behind.

"The Washington road," the coroner said, "is infested with people asking for rides. It appears that this man was attacked by one and murdered. The bullet entered the back of his head and came out through the forehead."

The body was found by two small colored girls as they were walking through a thicket 6 miles from Oilville. It lay about 30 yards from Route 5, leading from Charlottesville to Richmond.

Apparently Ellison's assailant was a powerful man, or he had assistance, because the body had been dragged up a steep embankment.

A bunch of keys with a white card bearing the name of A. D. Willard was found in the pockets, together with two handkerchiefs. Whatever money Ellison had was gone.

The body apparently had been in the woods for five days.

Identified by Friend.

The body was brought to Richmond tonight after having been identified definitely by Deputy Sheriff Irving C. Leetz, of Prince George County, a friend.

A conference was called by John Q. Rhodes, head of the State police, and plans mapped for running down the murderer.

"The only thing we have to go on so far," Rhodes said, "is the matter down at Radford."

He was referring to a report from that town Tuesday that an automobile answering the description of Ellison's had been seen by Chief of Police C. M. Howell. The operator of the machine, Howell reported, bought gasoline in Radford, refused to pay for it, and drove away at top speed.

Robert W. Daniel, owner of the Brandon estate and Ellison's employer, today asked the Department of Justice in Washington to aid in the search for the murderer.

Police here believe that Ellison was shot on the Richmond-Washington highway, and that the murderer, taking over the wheel of the automobile, turned off the highway at Ashland to dispose of the body.

Ellison left Washington about 5:30 p. m. Sunday after saying good-by to his sister, Mrs. Arthur L. Willard, at her apartment, 2101 Connecticut avenue northwest. In the rumble seat of his coupe, Mrs. Willard later told police, were a number of historical mementoes which he was taking to Brandon, the colonial estate of which he was manager.

Brandon, located on the James River, 14 miles from Petersburg,

The Flood Toll.

The raging Republican River was reported to have wiped out the villages of Parks and Max, in Nebraska.

Fifteen were known dead and many were missing in Colorado and Wyoming floods.

By the Associated Press.

Lincoln, Neb., May 31.—Cascading flood waters from two weeks of rain roared down the Republican River late today, reportedly wiping out two villages in southwestern Nebraska, with unconfirmed reports of several deaths and huge property loss.

Snapping of all communication wires to the area prevented immediate verification of a half-dozen ominous stories of death and ruin. Telegraph companies, railroads and radio amateurs sought to establish communication.

Unconfirmed advices said that at least six men had been swept to their deaths when a bridge gave away near McCook, center of the flood zone.

Rains continued tonight, stopping all train and automobile traffic to the territory and grounding planes all over the State.

The tiny villages of Parks and Max, according to word received at McCook, were wiped out. It could Smith Will Offer Bill to End AAA Licensing Provisions.

Move Is Based On Court Ruling

Johnson Presents Plan at White House for Reviving NRA.

By Felix Bruner.

The first legislative move designed to conform with the Supreme Court NRA decision was made yesterday with the announcement by Chairman Smith, of the Senate Agricultural Committee, that an amendment to remove licensing provisions from the AAA act would be reported to the Senate next week.

Indicating that the move had the approval of the Administration, Senator Smith said that he never had believed the provision was constitutional and that the NRA decision had confirmed his belief. President Roosevelt earlier in the day had indicated the belief that the decision had cast doubt on constitutionality of some of the AAA provisions.

Under the present act the AAA is empowered to license middlemen, including processors and wholesalers, to make effective price agreements between them and producers. Removal of the licensing power probably would make ineffective enforcement of these agreements. At present there are about 75 licenses and 30 marketing agreements. Most of the former involve the milk business and the latter include largely the handling of fruits and vegetables.

Senator Pope (Democrat), Idaho, proposed in a radio talk last night that licensing features and marketing agreements be restricted to interstate transactions and that a program of cooperation with the States for intrastate agreements be set up.

Johnson Presents Plan.

Secretary Wallace, however, said that in spite of the court decision the AAA would go ahead with its program generally.

Meanwhile, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, first NRA administrator, presented to President Roosevelt late yesterday an outline of his proposal for new legislation intended to preserve some of the benefits of NRA. He declined to disclose the nature of his proposal, although he has contended since the Supreme Court decision last Monday that "a constitutional NRA law can be written."

The President continued through the day his conference on effects of the decision. He indicated that he would have a statement today covering "pending cases," and that other statements would follow. It is expected that the first announcement will have to do only with immediate plans for some of the emergency organizations affected by the decision, but it is not expected to contain an intimation of future policy.

Confers With Raskob.

Among the President's visitors yesterday, besides Gen. Johnson, were John J. Raskob, former Democratic national chairman; Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic leader; Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York; Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin; Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, and Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator. The weekly Cabinet meeting was brief and Secretary Wallace remained after the meeting. He and Davis were believed to have discussed the effect of the decision on the Farm Administration.

Plans of the United Mine Workers for a Nation-wide soft-coal strike June 17 were going ahead. Specific instructions covering conduct of the strike are expected to go to 6,000 local unions today.

The NRA Labor Advisory Board sent telegrams to 200 State labor federations and local councils ask-

His Solution Not Yet Ready

Indicates Amendment to Constitution May Be Necessary.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Contending that the Supreme Court's decision in the NRA case had stripped the Federal Government of power to deal with social and economic problems, President Roosevelt, in a momentous statement to the press yesterday, called on the people of the country to meet squarely an issue of greater importance, aside from war, than has ever arisen in this Nation.

This issue, far transcending any partisan question, he said, was whether the economic and social problems of this country should be returned to the jurisdiction of 48 sovereign governing bodies or whether, as in every other country of the world, the federal, or central government, should have power over these aspects of life.

Never before had President Roosevelt appeared so serious and so grave as yesterday, when he discussed the Supreme Court NRA decision, which he regarded as the most important in his lifetime; indeed, the most important since the Dred Scott decision which later precipitated the Civil War.

Sees 50-Year Set-back.

He appeared convinced that the opinion declaring the NRA unconstitutional—certainly the obiter dicta in that ruling—had relegated the country back 50 years to a "horse and buggy" definition of interstate commerce, a definition he regarded incompatible with the interdependent, rapidly moving life of today.

Yet Mr. Roosevelt apparently was not ready to point out the solution for the impasse which he contended had been thrust upon the country by the unanimous voice of the nine black-robed justices of the Supreme Court last Monday.

Everything the President said indicated the only solution was adoption of a constitutional amendment giving the Federal Government jurisdiction over wages, working conditions and production in mining, manufacturing and farming. But when he was specifically asked whether he was at this time proposing such action, he replied that was not necessarily the only solution.

He did not indicate how he believed the problem should be solved, except to say that it was one which the people of this Nation must meet, not necessarily this summer or fall but during the next five to ten years.

Awaits Nation's Views.

Explaining that his purpose was to awaken the country to the far-sweeping implications of the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Roosevelt appeared desirous of gauging the sentiment of the country before forcing a definite settlement of an issue as old as the Nation itself, one which has threaded its way through every major development of the country's history—State Rights versus a strong centralized government.

In his avowed effort to clarify for the country the situation left in the wake of the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Roosevelt used broad, sweeping strokes, with a brush dipped in the blackest ink. He referred to some of the specific problems created by the court's decision, but only to illustrate the consequences of what had been done.

Some of the points he made were startling. For instance, he said the decision raised the gravest doubts over the validity of the crop control program of AAA and of the 1933 securities and the stock exchange acts, parts of the New Deal program which previously had not been regarded as imperiled.

Mr. Roosevelt thought that under the Supreme Court's observations on interstate commerce, the Federal Government would be devoid of

Kidnap Probe Points Again To Karpis Mob

Volney Davis Suspicioned as Brains of Tacoma Boy's Abduction.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., May 31.—The needle of supicion in the $200,000 George Weyerhaeuser abduction swung tonight over an array of shady specialists in murder, kidnaping and robbery—but again pointed most frequently to remnants of the vicious Karpis gang.

The name of Volney Davis, lieutenant of the arch criminal Alvin Karpis, leader of the mob that kidnaped Edward G. Bremer of St. Paul, popped into the picture for a second time in 24 hours.

The seventh day of the disappearance ended at noon, automatically invoking the legal presumption that the 9-year-old lumber heir either had been slain or taken across a State boundary line and thus permitting prosecution under the Lindbergh law.

United States Attorney H. H. McPike, in San Francisco announced Federal agents had entered Alcatraz prison there and questioned John Paul Chase, henchman of the late John Dillinger and George (Baby Face) Nelson, in connection with the Weyerhaeuser case. The result was not disclosed.

Even straggling members of the broken George (Machine Gun) Kelly mob came under the widening investigation when a Federal officer here acknowledged he would "like to talk to" Ed Bentz, missing Tacoma associate of Kelly and Albert Bates.

Bentz, who jumped bonds totaling $27,000 after his arrest at Dallas,

Bank Measure Called Illegal By Vanderlip

By Robert C. Albright.

Nearing final action in a Senate banking sub-committee, the Administration's bank bill yesterday encountered important opposition from a veteran member of the Federal Reserve Board and a former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

George R. James, square-jawed, heavy-set member of the Federal Reserve Board, told Senators he had no share in drafting the legislation, and considers it for the most part "unnecessary."

Frank A. Vanderlip, slight, ruddy-featured former president of the National City Bank and charter member of the Committee for the Nation, said the bill "is unconstitutional, in that it passes to a political body both the executive powers of currency management and the policy as well."

Chairman Carter Glass, of Virginia, unyielding opponent of Title 2 of the bill, increasing Federal Reserve Board control over currency and bank credit, scheduled one more hearing Monday, after which the sub-committee may proceed to executive consideration of the measure. It has passed the House.

Called Unnecessary.

"I don't feel that there is a great deal of need for legislation at this time," James, 12 years a memberof the board, told the sub-committee yesterday.

"You don't see much in this measure that can not be done under the present law?" asked Senator Glass.

"No, sir," replied James.

Again, in response to a question by Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, James said he thought Title 2 of the measure, reputedly drafted by the governor of the body on which he serves, is "unnecessary."

"I have felt right along that the provisions and objectives of the bill already are provided for in the present law."

American Messiahs

(Copyright, 1935, Simon & Schuster, Inc.)

Installment XIV—One-to-Sixteen (Part 2)

This is the fourteenth installment of "American Messiahs" by the Unofficial Observer, author of the "New Dealers," which appeared last year. While "American Messiahs" does not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post, it is commended as a most candid discussion of the mavericks, the reformers and the radio spellbinders now booming their way across the American political stage.

Harding was dead and Coolidge had taken over the liabilities of the Ohio gang and the pitiful attempt to restore "normalcy" by announcing that it had been restored. With his usual tactlessness, Wheeler ignored the "tradition" that a new Senator shall keep his mouth shut until he has been "educated," and almost at once set out on a scalping-party. Tom Walsh was exposing the oil scandals and another investigation already had uncovered the scandals in the Veterans' Bureau. Harry Daugherty sat placidly in the office of the Attorney-General and Wheeler argued that such scandals could not have developed unless there had been something more than mere negligence in the Government's prosecuting office. There were plenty of ugly rumors but nobody cared to dig up the facts, with Daugherty in control of the secret service and most Senators with something to conceal. Wheeler boldly plunged in and demanded an investigation, especially of the failure of the Department of Justice to enforce the antitrust laws. He was frustrated, but he returned to the fight. Eventually, he had a nerve to submit a resolution ordering a Senate investigation by a special committee and naming the members of the committee. He was told that this was practically an insult to the presiding officer of the Senate, who always selected the members of special committees. In reply, Wheeler charged that the Republicans were trying to arrange a "whitewash" of Daugherty and forced the investigation. The membership of the committee was named by the Senate as a whole, and Burton K.

Italy Mobilizes 40,000 More For Service in East Africa

By the Associated Press.

Rome, May 31.—Italy mobilized 44,000 more troops for service in East Africa today shortly after new "provocative" incidents calculated to strain still further Italy's already tense relations with Ethiopia were officially disclosed.

The controlled press said the new mobilization order, which pushes past 225,000 the number of soldiers and workmen destined for Africa, represented "Italy's decision to answer by force of arms the menaces of the situation."

An official communique, issued earlier, charged Ethiopian authorities and soldiers with arresting Italian diplomatic couriers carrying mail to the Italian consulate at Gondar May 12, rifling the mail and releasing the couriers from jail at Ras Gassa only after representations by the consulate.

Sharply assailed in today's newspapers were certain "unenlightened European quarters" which criticized or tended to obstruct Italy's policy toward Ethiopia.

(French and British pressure at Geneva last week caused Italy to accept arbitration of her quarrel with Ethiopia, something Benito Mussolini previously had rejected.

(Authoritative quarters at London said Friday the British Embassy in Rome had protested to the Italian government attacks made by the Italian press against Great Britain, on the grounds that the government was responsible because of its control of the press.)

Youth Shot in Bed by Mother Near Death in Hospital Here

A 17-year-old youth lay near death in Casualty Hospital last night with a gunshot wound above his heart, while Prince Georges County police held his mother and father in custody, pending the outcome of his injuries.

The victim, Martin White, was shot as he lay in bed at the family farm home on the River road, a mile from Bladensburg, Md., across from the Evergreen Cemetery.

According to officials, his mother, Mrs. Anna White, 36, has admitted firing the .38-caliber bullet which wounded him. She was despondent, fearing insanity or a nervous breakdown, and sought to kill her son, her husband and herself, police said she confessed.

"I could not bear the thought of being separated from them in any way, and not being able to take them with me," they quoted her as saying.

No charges have been placed against Mrs. White, or her husband, Joseph, 38, a farmer.

She told officers, they said last night, that she also was worried about financial matters and that her husband had been drinking heavily for some time.

The shooting occurred in the early morning. Young White was given first aid by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad and taken to Casualty Hospital. Late last night physicians reported his condition as slightly improved.

Prince Georges County Policeman Claude Reese arrested Mr. and Mrs. White. They are being held without bond.

Coalition Move Wins Support Of Pattangall

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Me., May 31.—Proposed Republican-Democratic coalition opposition to President Roosevelt in the 1936 election today had an outspoken recruit in Chief Justice William R. Pattangall of the Maine supreme court.

From a camp in the northern woods Justice Pattangall said he had written a Washington friend expressing "hope that such a coalition may be brought about" and saw "no reason why it can not be done."

For the past year Justice Pattangall has delivered many public blows at the New Deal, precursors to his Washington letter.

Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the Wilson Administration, also was interested in a proposed conference of prominent Democrats, possibly in Richmond, to offer "some form of political action that is for our country and above party."

Colby and Pattangall were guests at a "free press" convocation at Colby College recently, and there, Pattangall said, they conferred briefly on the political situation.

Originally a Republican who changed his party affiliations to join the normally minority party Democrats, Pattangall rose to their leadership in the State.

He split with other Maine Democratic leaders in 1928 when he refused to support Al Smith and campaigned for Hoover. He was appointed to the bench by a Republican, Gov. Ralph O. Brewster. A supporter of Roosevelt in 1932, he soon disagreed with New Deal thought and eventually voiced that disagreement from the public platform.

By the Associated Press.

Talk of a meeting in some Southern city, probably Richmond, to organize a Democratic-Republican anti-New Deal coalition was received with apathy by Virginia Senators.

Senator Glass said: "I don't know anything about it and don't want to know anything about it. I'm a Democrat; not a halfway Democrat. I stand on the Chicago platform on which all Democrats ought to stand until it's changed."

Senator Byrd's remark was: "I have not received an invitation to attend the proposed meeting called by Mr. Colby (Bainbridge Colby, of New York, Wilson's Secretary of State) and others. I have no expectation of receiving an invitation and do not intend to attend a meeting for such a purpose."

Dawson, U.S. Judge In Kentucky, Quits

Gave Adverse Opinions on New Deal Laws.

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., May 31.—Judge Charles I. Dawson, whose recent adverse decisions on important New Deal legislation attracted national attention, late today announced his resignation from the United States Court, Western District of Kentucky. He stated he would return to private practice in order to make provision for the future of his family.

Judge Dawson, 54-year-old Republican, who has been on the bench here ten years, held the national industrial recovery act unconstitutional in the western Kentucky coal case, ruling that mining was an intra-State process. He also ruled against the Kerr-Smith tobacco control act, and in a decision on the local slum-clearance project held the Government could not condemn land to erect private dwellings.

The only New Deal legislation he upheld was the Frazier-Lemke act. The Supreme Court reversed him on this.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, said he and Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, had recommended the appointment of Elwood Hamilton, Louisville attorney, to succeed Judge Dawson.

Between You and Me

A Historic Press Conference; Implications of NRA Decision; Flouting Tradition.

By Raymond Clapper

Within an hour after President Roosevelt held his press conference yesterday, you could almost feel the electric excitement about Washington.

Gossip travels with lightning speed through the National Capital, much as the backwoods grapevine carries news by swift oral transmission. Long before the first newspapers reached the street corners with accounts of what had taken place, the whole city knew that something of unusual import had occurred.

Mr. Roosevelt had argued with the umpire over the NRA decision. He had said in effect that the Supreme Court was threatening to take the country back to the horse and buggy stage. He had given notice that he proposed to carry the issue to the country and see whether the American people wish to stand as one nation or as 48 State sovereignties leaving the Federal Government powerless to deal with economic and social questions which affect the whole country.

In this he had done an unprecedented thing. He had appealed over the head of the Supreme Court to the court of public opinion. He had, with Rooseveltian instinct, dramatized the issue—some suggested that he had overdrawn it—which has been slowly gathering during the life of the New Deal, and had thrown it into the lap of the country.

Although Mr. Roosevelt spoke for almost two hours to perhaps 200 correspondents, he repeated time and again that the one issue raised by the Supreme Court is whether the Federal Government shall have control over the Nation's economic and social problems. He put it in various words, piled one illustration upon another, detail upon detail, always tying it back again into his one point—shall we deal with these problems as one nation or as 48 nations?

In substance, his argument is that economic and social problems transcend State lines; that the consuming power of a New York City garment worker affects the Wisconsin dairyman; that the buying power of a Kansas farmer affects the implement manufacturer in Pittsburgh.

The Supreme Court, Mr. Roosevelt says, practically limits—in its obiter dictum in the Schechter case—Federal interstate commerce jurisdiction to goods in transit. Under such an interpretation how can the Federal Government deal with agriculture, industry, labor, and control of stock exchanges and securities, and prevent conditions in one State—such as low wages in the Southern textile mills—from adversely affecting conditions in other States?

Mr. Roosevelt, while professing no resentment against the Supreme Court, stresses that it went back to the eighties for its interpretation of the interstate commerce clause, narrowing that construction back from the expanding trend in recent years, a trend which many New Deal lawyers had believed would be continued in construction of Roosevelt legislation.

It is this appeal from the Supreme Court to the force of public oponion that makes the Roosevelt press conference a historic event.

What is Mr. Roosevelt driving at in this unusual move?

That question is being asked throughout Washington. There is no official answer.

Surmise agrees generally that he is attempting to sound out the country to determine whether it wishes to accept the Supreme Court's decision as final. Or, if not, whether it is ready to support him in seeking some way out.

That obviously is what he hopes for. Whether this would be done by further legislative experiments based on the hope of broader decisions in the future, or whether he is ready to make the more direct, but slower attempt to amend the Constitution is unknown.

The best guess is that he will make some temporary proposals, but it is also a fairly good guess that he foresees the issue will not be finally settled except by a constitutional amendment giving the Federal Government power to legislate concerning industrial production, agriculture, labor and social questions. He expects that the issue will not be settled for four or five years. That suggests he has constitutional changes in mind.

Some suggest that another purpose may be to create a public atmosphere which will lead the court to adopt a broader attitude in future decisions on New Deal leigslation now pending in the courts.

You can find friends of the New Deal here who believe that Mr. Roosevelt is despairing of the court too soon. The NRA decision affects only one of numerous New Deal laws. AAA, TVA, the Bankhead act, and other measures are still to be passed upon. Furthermore the passages in the Schechter decision to which Mr. Roosevelt takes strongest exception—concerning interstate commerce—were included as obiter dicta, that is, passing comment not essential to the specific point before the court.

One suggestion was thrown out in Administration quarters that this obiter dictum is not necessarily binding on the court in future decisions.

In any event, Mr. Roosevelt has precipitated an issue which crystallizes the controversy over the New Deal. It is destined, probably, to be the pivot of national politics, certainly in the coming presidential campaign, if not for a longer time. It is one of the great issues such as arise seldom because it goes to the heart of the structure of the American Government, touching the explosive question of States rights and because it is impelled by a kind of fatality arising out of economic and social changes.

On the side of the Administration will be mustered the force of these modern conditions which have made even the corner grocery a branch of a New York headquarters; which have made each section of the country sensitive to changes in distant sections. There will be the political resourcefulness of Roosevelt with his capacity for popularizing issues. There will be the support of large vested interests which already have developed under the New Deal—farmers receiving their benefit payments, business men desiring protection from price-cutting and unfair competition, labor desiring wages and hours protection, and the hundred-and-one groups who have a financial stake in the New Deal. There will be the political support afforded by a party powerfully entrenched with the largest peacetime government pay roll in history, and the works relief chest should be of no slight consequence in inducing persons to see the light. With all this mixture of selfish interest will go also probably numbers who will be moved by the idealism which at times has been a powerful political force in American politics. They put over prohibition. Americans still have a crusading spirit which is responsive to appeals for social justice. The underdog population is exceptionally large and it has votes. Theodore Roosevelt in 1912 attempted with his New Nationlism something like Mr. Roosevelt is trying out. He had millions standing at Armageddon battling for the Lord.

Against the Administration will be other powerful forces. Mr. Roosevelt proposes to go against instincts deep-rooted in American political tradition. States' rights. Fear of bureaucracy. Fear of dictatorship. The strong appeal of tradition. The powerful hand of the founding fathers. What would Jefferson say? Suspicion of college professors in government. Mistakes since March, 1933, will haunt the Administration. Many leaders in his own party will dissent. Fears of communism, socialism, fascism, of parlor pinks will play powerfully against him. He proposes something revolutionary.

For all of our occasional emotional sprees, we are a conservative, hard-headed people. We have a tradition of rugged individualism. We have stood on it years after most European countries have gone into social legislation, official recognition of labor unionism, and after some of them have run the machinery of state socialism to the very foot of royal thrones.

This collision of fundamental forces apparently has been made inevitable by Mr. Roosevelt's decision to carry the issue to the country. It has the possibilities of a titanic struggle with large consequences for the future.

The Supreme Court's NRA decision resulted in a run on the bookstores for Prof. Corwin's book, "The Twilight of the Supreme Court."

"One would think," said one bookstore clerk, "that the situation called for a book on 'The Sunrise of the Supreme Court.'"

Expects to Get $145,453 of $180,899,701 Due.

By the United Press.

The United States last night reminded 13 foreign debtor governments that the debts owed to the United States are neither dead nor forgotten.

The State Department, at the request of the Treasury, forwarded formal "due bills" totaling $180,899,701.65, falling due on June 15. This total is in addition to huge sums on which 12 of the 13 nations are now in arrears.

The June 15 payments for which the debtors were billed were:

Great Britain, $85,670,765.05; France, $64,367,137.63; Belgium, $7,409,453.88; Poland, $4,039,039.71; Italy, $15,141,593.38; Czechoslovakia, $1,682,812,78; Rumania, $1,448,750.08; Jugoslavia, $325,000; Esthonia, $322,850.29; Latvia, $134,883.26; Lithuania, $164,351.93; Hungary, $37,410.66; Finland, $165,453.

Colombia Natives Club Reich Envoy

By the Associated Press.

Bogota, Colombia, May 31.—Fifteen native suspects were rounded up today in a search for a gang of men who clubbed Dr. Otto von Hentig, German Minister to Colombia, into insensibility as he walked along a mountain side with his nine-year-old son.

The son, Hartman, who cooperated tirelessly with detectives in the night-long search for the assailants, was said officially to have identified three of them.

The diplomat, who suffered five head wounds, several body wounds, fractured hands and a heavy blow near the heart, was in serious condition. His wallet was found close to the scene of attack, ending consideration of a possible robbery motive.

Dr. Von Hentig was former German consul general at San Francisco.

Installment XXIV—One-to-Sixteen (Part 2)

Wheeler conducted the investigation.

It was an open "fishing expedition." The resolution passed on February 29, 1924, at a time when Wheeler knew nothing definite about the Department of Justice. He merely had suspicions. One month later, Wheeler had broken into such a nest of stinking scandals that President Coolidge asked for Daugherty's resignation. Wheeler gave the Nation such unforgettable and lurid elements in its politicana as "The Little Green House on K Street," the amazing saga of Jess Smith, the fixer, who died in such a mysterious manner, and the sensational testimony of Roxie Stinson, Jess' divorced wife. It was Wheeler who exposed the worst cesspools in the political underworld of the Harding regime and gave the background for one of our few good political novels: Samuel Hopkins Adams' "Revelry."

The Department of Justice fought back in the traditional manner of a shaky government, not by defense and house-cleaning but by an attempt to get something on its accuser. Wheeler's past in Montana was carefully raked by a gang of Department of Justice agents, and he was indicted on the charge of using his senatorial influence to fix up some illegal oil leases for a client. A Senate committee, under the chairmanship of Borah, promptly investigated the charge and completely exonerated Wheeler. It was a year before Wheeler could get the case to trial in Montana—an interesting example of the use of the law's delays for political blackmail, that being the year when Wheeler ran on the Progressive ticket—and was acquitted by the jury in ten minutes. The Department of Justice obtained a second indictment for the same offense in the District of Columbia, but in December, 1925, the court dismissed the charge.

With this experience, it is easy to understand why Wheeler may feel some sympathy for Huey Long, who for more than two years has been the subject of investigation by the largest and most relentless corps of agents the Bureau of Internal Revenue has set on the heels of anybody since Capone. Long's effort to get a Senate investigation of Jim Farley was patterned on Wheeler's drive on the Department of Justice, though Big Jim is no Harry Daugherty. It is Huey's way of trying to make the income tax investigation look purely political.

The capstone of Wheeler's sensational rise to national prominence in the spring of 1934 was his nomination on the Progressive ticket with La Follette. Thus the progressives of both parties were joined. Wheeler made a strenuous campaign in which one of his celebrated dramatic touches was to pull an empty chair to the front of the platform and then, with finger wagging and the New England nasal accents suggestive of Cal, to launch a series of questions, beginning with "Why did you sit silent when Fall was looting the country's oil reserves, Mr. Cullidge?" After each question he waited for an answer from "Silent Cal," sometimes putting his hand behind his ear, while the audience shrieked with merriment.

As a matter of fact, Wheeler loves to be the "bad boy" a little too much for his own good, but when he controls his instinct for being "contrary" it is devastating. For example, in 1930 he was invited to speak at the National Democratic Club in New York by Jouett Shouse, then John Raskob's handyman. Wheeler went and said that the next Democratic nominee ought to be a liberal and that he ought to be Roosevelt. The Raskob-Shouse combination, which even then was strongly anti-Roosevelt and determined to force the nomination of a conservative Democrat, was thrown into consternation by this typical Wheeler performance.

It was Wheeler's astuteness and consistency in supporting the Roosevelt candidacy from an early date which makes his present loyalty to the New Deal so important an element in Roosevelt's calculations. Burt was the first prominent Democrat outside the State of New York to declare for Roosevelt for President and this was before Roosevelt's triumphant reelection as Governor had established F. D. R.'s reputation as a phenomenal vote-getter with the ability to break down Republican Party lines. Wheeler was one of the first to begin active pre-convention work for Roosevelt, being a powerful factor in lining up the Western and Mountain delegations for F. D. R. and in convincing George Norris, and later Bob La Follette, that Roosevelt was the white hope of American liberals. Wheeler was one of the Roosevelt "inner circle" at Chicago and was unquestionably disappointed when he failed to receive the Vice Presidential nomination. Later on he became sulky, as Roosevelt talked up "sound money" and was cautious in the silver policy.

What made Wheeler really angry with the New Deal, however, was the fact that when Roosevelt finally decided to "do something" for silver, he chose Key Pittman, of Nevada, rather than Wheeler, the traditional free silverite, as his agent. Wheeler claimed and still claims that Pittman is a "faker on silver," that, while Pittman also wants to "do something" for silver, he is not a thorough-going "16 to 1" free silverite according to the gospel of William Jennings Bryan. (Which is probably the reason Roosevelt used Pittman instead of Wheeler.)

Being a crank on money and a subscriber to the theory that all economic problems of the farmer can be solved by monetary inflation without changing any other elements in the picture, Wheeler was suspicious of the AAA. As an old-fashioned trust-buster, he was highly critical of NRA. Wheeler really devoutly believes in bimetallism as the answer to the woes of the capitalistic world, and is still living back in 1896, in his economic thought. Another of his pet schemes—the nationalization of the railroads—was also lifted from Bryan, and, as an ambitious politician, he will take on any other issues that look as though they might lead to something.

The truth is that Wheeler is rather lazy mentally. He hasn't kept up with the industrial procession and hasn't analyzed the implications of central banking credit in relation to specie, of technology in relation to production, and of ownership in relation to distribution. His early success of 1924, at the age of 40, lulled him into a mood of unwarranted self-confidence. If he would study current problems as Bob Wagner and young Bob La Follette study them, he would be a much more effective man.

The truth is that Wheeler is at bottom a gambler as well as a fighter. He has always taken political long shots. He loves the excitement of politics as some men love the tension of the stock exchange and is an independent "operator," who tries to show that he can do what cooler politicians say can't be done. The "16 to 1" theme of free silver is at his very core. He will run when there is only 1 chance out of 16 of winning, and after all, no man from Montana—with its minute electoral vote—can expect to reach the Presidency except as a long-shot gambler.

For this reason he is being watched closely. If the time looks propitious in 1936, he may suddenly come to the fore, with the support of Huey Long, the Farmer-Laborites, some of the Progressives (though not the La Follettes), and with the hope of aid from Coughlin. If things don't work out right for his plans he may support someone else, in the hope of getting the nomination as a liberal Democrat or as a Third Party leader for himself in 1940. Thus he might logically become the man to reunite the dissatisfied left wingers to a more liberal Democratic Party in 1940.

Wheeler has been feeling out the other Progressives about forming a legislative alliance of liberal Democrats and Progressive Republicans—the old problem of making prima donnas sing in chorus which has baffled liberals for years. He is not ready to break openly with Roosevelt, for whose political skill he has great admiration and much of whose program he favors. However, he has nothing to worry about personally, with a firm grip on his own State—he was reelected in 1928, year of the Hoover landslide, and again in 1934, by a phenomenal majority—and he can skip in and out of the party at his own sweet will, as he did in 1924, without fear of political punishment.

There is one further factor in his political strength which is difficult to classify—the fact that he is the father of six children. The human race still sub-consciously worships fertility and responds instinctively to men of large families—like Roosevelt and Al Smith. His family life is pleasant and modest. They live very quietly in Washington during the winters and spend much of the long non-political summers camping in Glacier National Park. One of Wheeler's daughters, Elizabeth, has already emerged as a radical youth leader and one of his sons works for Floyd Olson. Is another political dynasty akin to the Roosevelts in New York and the La Follettes in Wisconsin forming in the Northwest?

Wheeler, tall, rangy, intelligent and vigorous as most transplanted New Englanders, will bear watching. He is a good gamble for those who likes to play long shots, but he is too erratic for those who operate on safe political margins.

Triangle Killer, 18, Sentenced to Die

By the Associated Press.

London, May 31.—George Stoner, 18-year-old chauffeur, was sentenced today to die for the murder of Francis Rattenbury, his elderly employer, but the jury in Old Bailey freed Alma, the victim's wife and mistress of the condemned youth.

In his cell beneath the old court, Stoner told his father:

"I am content they have set her free. Whatever happens to me doesn't matter. I am glad she has been spared."

Rattenbury, 68-year-old retired architect, was fatally injured by blows from a heavy wooden mallet March 24 at his home in Bournemouth. He died four days later. Police arrested the couple and said confessions had been obtained from both. These later were withdrawn.

The jury recommended mercy for Stoner and the court said this recommendation would be conveyed to the proper authorities.

College Youths Lead Strikers In Ohio Rioting

200 Police Join Battle at Columbus Plant of Packing Company.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, May 31.—With Ohio State University students in the front ranks, Columbus Packing Co. strikers and their sympathizers clashed in a 30-minute pitched battle with 200 policemen and detectives today.

Four policemen were injured, dozens of strikers suffered bruises and cuts, and 22 strike sympathizers were arrested.

The riot brought an ultimatum from Safety Director W. S. Pealer for university students to stay "in their own end of town" and a point-blank order from Mayor Henry W. Worley against mass picketing at the plant, torn by strike disturbances for nearly two months.

Four hundred union electrical workers at Toledo held a strike threat in abeyance until Monday pending negotiations for a 20 per cent wage increase.

Police Sergt. Charles Fritz fatally shot William Williams, 30, at Cincinnati as the aftermath of a recent strike in the Norwood Chevrolet-Fisher Body plant. Fritz said Williams, armed with a butcher knife, attempted to resist arrest when police attempted to break up a strike argument.

Quiet prevailed in Canton in sharp contrast to the sporadic outbreaks that have marked the week-long strike of hundreds of steel workers. A vote of employes on a proposal to end the strike was arranged by city officials.

Representatives of 2,000 Tuscarawas and Stark County clay workers held a peace meeting with representatives of 18 companies in the Cleveland Regional Labor Board office in an effort to settle that strike, which likewise has caused numerous disturbances.

Union labor leaders announced settlement of a strike at the Weideman Co. in Cleveland. They said the company granted a 10 per cent wage increase.

Bank Bill Illegal, Vanderlip Charges

Reserve structure, he said he thought it had functioned "100 per cent" in the boom and depression periods, and with the banking act of 1935 can go much farther in meeting future emergencies.

"The public may be expecting a great deal more from the Federal Reserve Board than it can accomplish," he added.

"My experience as a member indicates to my mind that there are very distinct limits to what can be accomplished by the Federal Reserve Board through raising or lowering rediscount rates and through open market operations.

"As it now stands, they can buy to make money easy, but I am at a loss to see where they can find customers if they want to sell to have a reverse effect."

James opposed the six-year limitation of service on boards of directors of the regional banks, insisting that these boards should be looked to for control of the banks, rather than the various Federal Reserve bank governors. The governors, he said, are merely the "servants or employes" of the boards of directors.

Blaming the banks themselves for much of their recent difficulties, he said:

"If the banks hadn't stepped off the reservation and stepped into the promotion field of creating deposit liabilities on prices, rather than values, we wouldn't have had nearly as much trouble."

James favored continuance of self-government in the 12 regional Federal Reserve banks. He said a "dominating influence" has been exerted over the banks by the board in open market operations.

But he insisted the Federal Reserve system has been "wrongly maligned by speakers and writers who seem to attribute our failures to the Reserve system."

Favors Few Changes.

Warning of limitations involved in any centralized effort to control credit and prices, he favored only a few minor amendments to the banking law, mostly of a clarifying nature.

Vanderlip, who asked redrafting of Title 2 along Committee for the Nation's central banking lines, testified that "the banks today are very far from being liquid."

"Let them try to sell their Government bonds," said the New York banker.

"All at once?" interjected Senator Glass.

"All at once, or in small quantities," replied the witness.

Taking exception to proposals by Owen D. Young, of the New York Federal Reserve bank, that Congress adjourn after setting up a commission to study monetary legislation, Vanderlip said "Congress has already shown signs enough of abdicating."

"This is a job that Congress has got to do for itself," he said.

"It is the first duty of Congress to pass a Constitutional measure."

He asked that a price index be adopted by Congress as a guide to measuring value, with "a dollar having stable value measured by a definite price level" the ultimate objective.

King George Has Chill; Advised to Stay Indoors

London, May 31 (AP).—An official announcement tonight said King George was suffering from a chill and had been advised to remain indoors as a precautionary measure.

The monarch, who is celebrating his silver jubilee, therefore will not attend the London county council's jubilee reception with the Queen and other members of the royal family tonight.

Court circles said they did not consider his illness of a serious nature.

not be learned whether lives were lost there.

Not only the Republican, but the Platte and other streams in the southwestern part of the State were on a rampage, either overflowing or churning bankfuls and threatening to get out of control.

From McCook, prior to disruption of communication, came the story of a battle to save the lives of 14 men, marooned atop the Nebraska Power & Light Co. plant.

They, with other workers, had labored throughout last night as waters rose in efforts to prevent cutting off all electric power in the city. Late today tumbling waters drove the majority from their posts. The 14, however, were left on top as their companions fled to higher ground.

Houses Carried Away.

The waters swept into South McCook, shoving houses from foundations and carrying them with the flood. Live stock by the score perished in stricken farm areas—scene last summer of the State's greatest drought.

15 Known to Be Dead In Waters of Rockies

By the Associated Press.

Denver, May 31.—Off the Eastern slope of the towering Rocky Mountains, flood waters pounded through northeastern Colorado tonight, strewing at least 15 known dead over an area hundreds of miles long.

Utilities were crippled. Highways were washed out or covered. Property damage mounted to millions of dollars.

Besides the known dead in Colorado and adjoining Wyoming, estimates of the missing in the two States went beyond a score.

Each hour brought threats and damage to the Fort Morgan and Sterling districts in northeastern Colorado as torrents roared out of canyons and creeks and gushed into the overtaxed Platte River.

In Colorado Springs, where the surging waters focused their fury and a dozen persons were dead or missing, a possible appeal for Federal assistance was discussed.

Death List Tentative.

The death list remained highly tentative because of varying reports about the many missing and the numerous cloudbursts and rains from which the floods arose.

Adding to the two known dead at Colorado Springs came reports of seven lives lost in southeastern Wyoming as well as three at Kiowa and three at Elbert in eastern Colorado.

What life and property the rampaging Platte would claim in the northeastern Colorado sugar bowl could not be even guessed, but already a portion of the city of Fort Morgan had been endangered, railroad and highway bridges washed out and thousands of acres of land inundated.

"Unprecedented" was the description given of the danger tonight at Sterling.

The Colorado dead:

Mrs. Emma B. Clark, 56, Colorado Springs.

Soren Anderson, Kiowa rancher.

Mrs. E. C. Greenstreet, 45, and her 1-year-old baby.

Mrs. Mary Goff, 60, Kiowa.

Mrs. Grace Emmaheiser, Kiowa, daughter of Mrs. Goff.

Mrs. Lolo Gishes, 65, Kiowa.

The Wyoming dead:

Mrs. Willis Stracklen and her 5-year-old son of Glendo.

Dr. Fred W. Phifer, his wife, and their son, Woodrow and his wife, all of Wheatland.

A Cheyenne truck driver, tentatively identified as George Garnett.

More Deaths Rumored.

Reports were persistent that 10 other persons of Colorado Springs had perished. Nearly that number were listed as missing. Search for other possible bodies in the debris-strewn portion of the city continued.

A series of cloudbursts near Colorado Springs loosed the flood waters early yesterday. Additional downpours shortly afterward in the Kiowa and Elbert districts, wreaked damage there, destroying almost a quarter of Kiowa and inundating most of Elbert and sweeping about a score of buildings downstream.

From Kiowa and Elbert the floods raged northwestward toward Denver and northeastward toward the Sterling section, via Cherry and Kiowa Creeks.

Much of Denver's population stood tense through most of the night at the banks of Cherry Creek, fearing another flood such as piled up heavy damage two years ago. The reinforced banks of that tricky stream carried the waters to the South Platte River without great destruction.

Bouisson Forms Coalition Rule To Avert Collapse of the Franc 000), with the tempo steadily increasing.

During the week ended May 24, 3,166,000,000 francs were withdrawn. Since, the Chamber of Deputies was told last night, daily withdrawals have exceeded 1,000,000,000. Tuesday's 1,500,000,000 was described as the high mark. Subsequent withdrawals did not diminish, it was said, and some quarters claimed they increased.

Agrees to Compromise.

Loath though he was to relinquish his job as president of the chamber, with the palace-like home that goes with it, Bouisson nevertheless was induced to moderate his early demands for broad coalition support and compromise with the 100 Radical Socialists deputies on some points.

In exchange, the group, headed by Herriot, agreed to back his demands for power to decree legislation to defend the franc against speculation, balance the budget and promote economic recovery—the powers Flandin wanted.

A government drive on speculators against the franc, meanwhile, lost momentum, as only one small private bank was closed, that yesterday, and no one was arrested despite police visits to examine records of trading accounts, banks, telegraph offices and several homes.

The bank was charged with sending out circulars to its customers advising them to purchase gold stocks "because of the franc's fluctuation."

Repercussions of the French crisis were felt yesterday in Amsterdam, London and Montreal.

Netherlands authorities raised The Netherlands Bank's discount rate from 4 to 5 per cent, partly because the bank has been losing gold to the United States, while monetary experts said they did not believe the guilder could remain at the present gold parity if the French franc were depreciated.

Dr. Leonardus J. A. Trip, governor of the bank, said the position of the franc was firm and ascribed weakness of the guilder "to the psychological influence of fear that the franc might go and take the guilder with it."

A further fall in gold currencies on the London exchange resulted from the French situation, with the United States dollar depreciating 2 9-16 cents to the pound and closing officially at 4.95 3-16. The French franc slipped to 75.25 to the pound as compared with Thursday's quotation of 74.70, while discounts on 90-day advances on the franc were as high as 6 francs.

Trading on the Montreal exchanges was virtually paralyzed as traders, influenced by the uncertain political situation in Franct and the measures taken at Amsterdam, refused to offer quotations for French francs, Swiss francs or Dutch guilders. Holders tried vainly to sell.

of "repudiation of indiscriminate bombing," the foreign Secretary said, "which I trust will lead to effective abolition of one of the most terrible and haunting dangers threatening the world."

Eden told the Commons it was the government's view that "progress with an air pact and with air limitation need not wait on progress in other subjects dealt with in the (Anglo-French) communication of February 3," which proposed general, interlocking security arrangements.

That was prefaced by Simon's statement that "the question of fitting it (the air pact) into a general settlement is a question that arises at a later stage."

Taken together, the two declarations represented the government's definite departure from the stand it has consistently maintained—that security for eastern Europe, general arms limitation and Germany's return to the League of Nations must be achieved simultaneously with the air pact.

20,000 Killed As Quake Hits India Province

them. Only the door frames remained standing.

Hundreds of others who fled for safety in the streets were not so fortunate. Huddled in massed panic, they were caught and killed as buildings collapsed all about them.

The shocks, felt about 3 a. m., laid waste the countryside around Quetta, tore up farm lands, shattered dwellings and disrupted communications. So violent were the quakes that birds were said to have been shaken out of their nests.

First reports that railways had suffered heavily were apparently incorrect, since relief supplies and workers quickly marshaled by the Punjab government were able to get through.

Hardest hit, apparently, was the Province of Baluchistan, which has 868,000 population. Meager reports said one village—Mastung—with 4,000 inhabitants, lost 80 per cent of them. The villages of Larkana, Shikarpur and Ratadero also were known to have suffered. Terrified thousands all over the area were sleeping tonight in the open after praying to their Hindu gods for salvation.

An official report from Quetta said:

"Many casualties are feared to have occurred among the subordinate civil and police officers. The police force was almost wiped out. No railway officers were killed, but heavy casualties were feared among the subordinate personnel."

Carter sent one short message confirming the intensity of the quake and urgently requesting physicians and nurses.

A brief wireless message said emergency hospitals and camps had been set up on the race course and the grounds of the residency.

By the Associated Press.

Joseph G. Groeninger, consul at Karachi, India, notified the State Department today no Americans were killed or injured in the earthquake which killed thousands yesterday in India.

Groeninger reported that William H. Hornibrook, of Salt Lake City, Utah, American Minister to Persia and Afghanistan, his wife and daughter, and Ray Hare, passed through the district only six days ago returning from Afghanistan, where Hornibrook had been to present his credentials on May 4.

Coincidentally, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman of the American Red Cross, cabled sympathy to the British Red Cross. He also asked the league of Red Cross societies in Paris to keep him advised on the situation in regard to relief of the victims.

James Ellison Is Found Slain NearRichmond

Va., is famed not only for its historical background, but for the racing thoroughbreds—Brandon Mint, Brandon Rose, Tutti Frutti and others—that have been bred there.

Leaving Washington, Ellison planned to drive to Petersburg and thence to Brandon. When he failed to arrive at the latter place Tuesday, police were asked to search for him.

Mrs. Willard, widow of Admiral Willard, enlisted the aid of the Department of Justice and J. Edgar Hoover sent one of his agents to the Old Dominion to take charge of the search.

Sister Holds Theory.

From the outset, Mrs. Willard was fearful that her brother might have been the victim of a hitch-hiker. That Ellison was in the habit of playing the Good Samaritan along the road was a fact well known to his friends, including Mr. Daniel, owner of Brandon.

J. R. Routson, a graduate student of George Washington University and a friend of Ellison, recalled his saying that he would give a "lift" to persons along the road if "they looked all right."

Ellison was a member of a prominent family in Missouri. His father was a judge in the State Supreme Court and his brother is today a well-known member of the Missouri bar.

Ellison came to Virginia 20 years ago to become principal of a school at Heathsville. He held that position until eight years ago, when he became manager of Brandon.

Ellison is survived by his widow, Etelka; a daughter, Julia, who is secretary to Mr. Daniel, and two sons, James E., jr., and Robert, both of whom are students at the University of Missouri.

AN ANALYSIS . . of the Supreme Court Decisions
UP TO NOW, the Supreme Court's recent momentous decisions have been cheered lustily by the pros . . mourned by the cons.
WHAT WILL be the effect of the decisions? Does the set-back to the NRA mark a step forward or a step backward?
THESE QUESTIONS are discussed intelligently, interestingly, in an article by Edward S. Corwin in tomorrow's Sunday Post. Prof. Corwin, a recognized authority on the Supreme Court and the Constitution, has been McCormick professor of jurisprudence at Princeton University since 1918 and is the author of numerous works on political science . . among them, "The Twilight of the Supreme Court."

Mrs. Zell was charged with aiding and abetting in the sale of a half-pint of liquor, and Monroe with violating Section 40 of the ABC law, relating to the illegal sale of liquor, the alleged offense occuring May 26. Each noted an appeal to the corporation court an d furnished $2,000 bond.

Ten per cent of the value of the license is added to the cost of those licenses renewed after yesterday. If the trucks are selling to individuals as well as to stores, a hucksters license, costing $301, will be necessary.

Building Plans Held Necessary To Beer Permit

Applicants Must Submit Data With Petitions, Board Insists.

Detailed plans showing the proposed building must accompany conditional petitions for licenses to sell beer and light wines, the Liquor Control Board of Montgomery County decided yesterday at its meeting in the Liquor Control Building at Silver Spring, Md.

The board has received a number of applications which state that the petitioner plans to erect certain kinds of buildings if the license is granted, but does not want to go to the expense of erecting the building unless sure of the license.

Guard Against Shacks.

Such applications must be accompanied by the plans and in the event the license is granted it will be subject to revocation without other cause if the building erected does not comply with the plans. The new policy of the board was evolved to guard against petitioners receiving license and then erecting shacks for the sale of beer.

Clara May Downey, operator of the Olney Inn, at Olney, Md., filed application for a license to serve liquors with meals under provisions of the new restaurant act recently signed by Gov. Nice. The act permits sale of liquor of more than 14 per cent with meals in restaurants having more than 30 chairs, a $30,000 investment, and which have been in operation since 1932.

First Under New Act.

The Olney Inn license application is the first one received under this act, which was introduced by State Senator Stedman Prescott to permit established resorts of good repute to compete with similar establishments in Washington and Prince Georges. A hearing on the application will be held June 14 at the Liquor Control Building.

A license to sell beer was granted to Walter C. Offutt, of Gaithersburg, Md. Notice of appeal to the State license bureau by Mrs. Dessie Beahm, of near Travilah, from the refusal to grant a license of the county board was received. A hearing will be held next week in Rockville by the State board, but the date was not established yesterday. State Senator Prescott represents Mrs. Beahm.

Mrs. Mencken, Wife of Author, Succumbs at 37

Phi Beta English Scholar at Goucher Dies of Chronic Ailment.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 31.—Mrs. H. L. Mencken, writer, teacher and lecturer, and wife of the editor and author, died late today at Johns Hopkins Hospital. Death resulted from an illness she had suffered at intervals for a year but which became grave only recently.

Several times during the last year she had been a patient of the hospital. She became ill again in the middle of last week and was sent to the hospital for observation. Physicians reported that her condition reached the acute stage Sunday.

Mrs. Mencken was 37. Before her marriage to Mencken August 27, 1930, she was Sara Powell Haardt. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Anton Haardt, of Montgomery, Ala., where she lived until she was 18.

Both Parents Dead.

Both her parents are dead, her mother dying only last December.

Upon her graduation from Goucher College in 1920, Miss Haardt was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in recognition of her scholarship and two years later was recalled to her alma mater to become instructor in English.

For three years she engaged in post-graduate study at Johns Hopkins University under Dr. John Knight Dunlap. A severe illness prevented her from presenting herself for a degree, and she returned to Montgomery.

There, while recovering over a period of a year and a half, Miss Haardt embarked upon a writing career that began with verse and essays and grew ultimately to embrace one published full-length work, another half completed at the time of her death, much short fiction, serious articles and satirical humor. She achieved separate fame as a book critic.

Starting in 1925, she was a frequent contributor to the editorial page of the Baltimore Evening Sun, with sparkling essays on a variety of subjects in the space that each Monday is occupied by the writings of her husband.

Wrote for Magazines.

In a short time after she dedicated herself to writing, the output of her pen began to appear in many magazines.

She took a flyer into the movies with such success that dispatches from the West Coast in 1927 reported a price of $25,000 paid for one of her scenarios. She was selected by a motion-picture firm as one of 12 writers of promise engaged to write original materials for the films.

Miss Haardt's engagement to Mencken was announced in Montgomery August 2, 1930. They were in Baltimore the same month.

Almost simultaneously plans were announced for publication of her first novel, "The Making of a Lady," a work that dealt with life in an unnamed Southern city that was unmistakably Montgomery. Her second novel, upon which she was at work when she fell ill, was to be called "Southern Album."

Surviving relatives include three sisters and a brother. They are Mrs. T. M. McClellan, jr., of Birmingham; Mrs. Haardt Stevenson of Montgomery; Mrs. Chambless Allen of Montgomery and John Hall Haardt of Montgomery.

Kidnaped Boy's Kin Go on Secret Missions

Davis Is Hunted As Master Mind Of Kidnaping

Tex., in 1932, on bank robbery charges, was a known associate of Harvey Bailey, as well as of Albert Bates and Kelly.

The three were convicted in the $200,000 ransom kidnaping of Charles F. Urschel, Oklahoma City oil man. All are serving life prison terms.

About 135 officers, including 15 tight-lipped Federal agents, remained in leash here while associates of the parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Weyerhaeuser, jr., presumably continued the forlorn attempt to get in touch with the abductors and hand them $200,000 ransom.

One authoritative source talked of the possibility that a $25,000 reward might be offered soon, primarily in an effort to obtain the release of the boy through hitherto untried channels.

The Seattle Times quoted an unnamed Tacoma boarding house proprietor as saying a man closely resembling Davis had lived at her home a month in 1934 and returned last Saturday morning to borrow her motor car.

Identifies Photographs.

The woman said she had identified police photographs of Davis as "Mr. Herman," the former boarder, whose "wife" resembled description of Paula Harmon, gangster moll.

The "Hermans" had frequent visits from two men during their stay at the Tacoma boarding house, the woman asserted.

Saturday morning "Mr. Herman" appeared at her house again, the woman said.

"Well, we're back in town again," she quoted "Mr. Herman" as saying. "But only for a very short time. I wonder, Mrs. —— if I could borrow your car to pick up Mrs. Herman down at the office? I'll bring it back in a few hours."

When the car was returned three hours later, a stranger was driving it.

The boarding house woman's story tied in closely with that of Fred Stojack, University of Washington student, who said a man he believes was Davis rode over to Tacoma from Seattle in a bus.

Letter for Davis.

Stojack said he was in the same bus seat last Friday night with a man who was reading a letter addressed to "Volney Davis." It was postmarked Chicago. The student picked Davis' picture later from a group of photographs.

The university student reported his bus seat companion spent most of the time during an hour's ride looking out the window and asking unusual questions about Fox and Vashion islands in Puget Sound—whether they were thickly settled and how they could be reached.

Fox Island once was a Chinese smuggler's nest. It is 12 miles from here and fairly well populated. The theory some of the more secluded islands of the sound might be used as a kidnapers' hideout has been aired in many quarters.

Stojack said the man crowded past him and hurried from the bus as soon as it reached the Tacoma terminal from Seattle.

Gone for a Week.

He described him as being about 5 feet, 9 inches tall, somewhat stockily built, wearing a dark hat pulled well over his eyes, single-breasted, brown suit, somewhat worn, and a faded blue shirt without tie.

Under the drastic "Lindbergh law" passed by Congress, the law presumes a kidnap victim has either been killed or has been taken across a State line after a week in the hands of his captors. George Weyerhaeuser disappeared last Friday noon on the way home from school.

This permits the Government to invoke life imprisonment or the death penalty on the abductors.

What steps Federal agents might take under the Lindbergh law was as well hidden as their activities.

Admiral Capps, Of Navy Claims Unit, Dies at 71

Heart Attack Is Fatal to Manager of Fleet Corporation in War.

Rear Admiral Washington Lee Capps, 71, former chief constructor of the Navy, died early yesterday of a heart attack at his residence, 1823 Jefferson place. As senior member of the Compensation Board, Admiral Capps took an active part in handling war damage claims of all sorts under the Navy.

By direction of President Wilson, Admiral Capps served with the Emergency Fleet Corporation during the World War. He was elected general manager of this organization.

Apparently Admiral Capps was in the best of health Wednesday. He attended to his duties as usual and his unexpected death came as a shock to his friends in the Navy Department.

Born in Portsmouth, Va.

Admiral Capps was born in Portsmouth, Va., and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1884. In 1888 he received a diploma from the University of Glasgow, in Scotland, and then he entered the Construction Corps. From October, 1903, until October, 1910, he served as chief constructor and also as chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

During the Spanish-American War he served on Admiral Dewey's staff aboard the Olympia, but was not present at the Battle of Manila Bay, for he had joined the staff after the famous sea fight.

The razing and repairing of Spanish vessels after the war was superintended by Admiral Capps. President Wilson named him as one of the American commissioners to the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, held in London. He also represented the Navy Department at the International Engineering Conference in San Francisco in 1915.

Recipient of Medal.

For distinguished servcie during the World War, Admiral Capps received the D. S. M. In 1928, when he reached the age of retirement, Admiral Capps was requested by the Secretary of the Navy to continue to serve on active duty as senior member of the Compensation Board.

Surviving Admiral Capps are his widow and several nieces and nephews.

Funeral services will be held Monday at 11 a. m. from St. John's Episcopal Church, followed by burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

Still In The Dark.

As administrator of the most extensive public works program ever carried out Secretary Ickes ought to be able to throw a great deal of light upon the social and economic value of such undertakings. The PWA has been in operation approximately two years. Its experience should be invaluable to the Government, especially in view of the fact that an enormous new work relief program is now being launched.

Secretary Ickes recognizes the public interest in the experience of the PWA by his article in the current Review of Reviews. But this brief survey of the results obtained from the appropriation of $3,300,000,000 is chiefly significant for what it does not say. Mr. Ickes makes three points: "PWA is efficient . . . its honesty is unquestioned," and its policies are a great improvement over the pork barrel.

To Secretary Ickes' everlasting credit the honesty of the PWA has never been open to doubt. It is well known, moreover, that the public works administrator has made a valiant effort to keep the distribution of funds entrusted to his custody aloof from politics.

But in this respect the record of achievements is unhappily not so convincing. Several large projects financed by PWA, such as the Grand Coulee power dam, stand as monuments to political influence rather than seasoned economic planning. Mr. Ickes admits that "by far the greatest difficulty (in administering the public works program) was occasioned by the political pressure brought to bear on us for administrative jobs." It would be strange indeed if the effects of partisan wire-pulling were not somewhere apparent in the PWA record.

The greatest interest, however, centers in the point of efficiency. Mr. Ickes insists that the PWA "is as efficient as private business and its results do come as close to perfection as is humanly possible." In support of this sweeping claim he offers only one concrete fact, that overhead expenses have been held down to $16,500,000 or .007493 per cent of the total appropriation. This, of course, represents merely the cost of distributing the public works fund. It conveys no indication whatever as to how effectively the money has been spent nor as to how much employment was created for each $100 or $1,000 of outlay.

The chief question regarding the PWA concerns neither honesty nor political domination, but the tangible results of this distribution of funds on the assumption that they would be wisely and profitably spent for the creation of jobs. On this point, Secretary Ickes has never given the public a satisfactory review of concrete achievements. And his current article leaves that issue still unanswered.

A Land Made Desolate.

The first reports of the Indian earthquake are written in terms that defeat realization. It is a grim commentary on human nature that the horror of a catastrophe should always seem to decrease with distance.

This criticism has become more rare with the growth of communication and the strengthening of international sympathies. Yet man's imagination has not kept the pace: he can talk in amazing numbers when he speaks of money or horsepower—not even the slaughters of the World War brought him to a point where he can easily appreciate such enormous casualties as these in British Baluchistan.

Only some thousand officers and men fell at the siege of Delhi, in the Indian mutiny; in yesterday morning's three shocks 30,000 persons are said to have perished—20,000 in Quetta alone. The more one gasps at the size of the figures, the less is one able to picture their dreadful significance. But the sympathy of all the uninjured world—even though it be a sympathy too stunned for perfect comprehension—goes out to northwestern India in her ruin.

An Abuse Of Privilege.

Memorial Day in the United States is a very solemn occasion. Its significance is concentrated in the fact that humanitarian sentiments and patriotic traditions transcend the political conflicts and partisan wrangling that enter into the day-to-day routine of government.

It is surprising, therefore, that a United States Senator should take advantage of this occasion to make a political speech. The setting was Arlington National Cemetery. In that venerated atmosphere thousands of devoted citizens had gathered. They conversed in those low tones that signify the presence of the honored dead. Unquestionably they expected to hear an address that would be in keeping with the occasion. But Senator Dickinson was out of key.

Undoubtedly "there is a lack of confidence in our course" on the part of a growing number of citizens. At almost any other place or time the propriety of the Iowa Senator's criticism would never have been questioned. But it is not impressive to impose partisanship upon an audience assembled out of respect to the Nation's hero dead. The intrusion of politics into an event of this kind is an abuse of privilege.

A President Leaves His Party.

The statement which President Roosevelt made at his press conference yesterday was of the most far-reaching political significance. In it he definitely turned his back on the traditions and principles of his party and gave tremendous stimulus to the move for a complete political realignment in the United States. His observations, informally presented but carefully weighed in advance, must be regarded as being of even greater moment to the future of the Nation than the court decision which aroused them.

Since its birth this Nation has operated under a Federal system of government. A Federal system is one in which political units with a preponderant degree of autonomy combine "to form a more perfect Union," by surrendering certain defined powers to a central government.

This essential character of our Government is expressed in the very name of the country—"United States." Among other peoples the preference has often been for a centralized or highly unified state; but ours is one of united yet semi-independent States. This character is stamped in every article of the Constitution, of which the tenth expressly reserves "to the States respectively, or to the people," all of "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States."

It was inevitable that such a governmental system should at the outset create two opposing tendencies—one seeking to enlarge the powers of the Federal Government at the expense of the States; the other seeking to preserve State powers against Federal aggrandizement. This was the basis of the split between Hamilton and Jefferson; this was the issue over which the Civil War was fought. This is the fundamental controversy between proponents and opponents of the New Deal. This is the theme song, sometimes tranquil but today again strident, of all our history as an independent Nation.

On the whole there has been a fairly even division, and therefore a generally harmonious balance, between these two contending forces. The natural tendency, as the Nation waxed great and powerful, and as scientific development broke down sectional lines, has been toward centralization at the expense of State rights. But it is to be noted that whenever one of the two forces has become particularly aggressive a reaction has set in to prevent excessive change. The centrifugal tendency reached its climax over the slavery issue, and a great war was fought to reestablish the principle of Federal union. The centripetal tendency has gone almost to the opposite extreme under the New Deal. And the Supreme Court has unanimously, if jarringly, applied the brakes to the aggrandizement of late ceaselessly sought by Washington.

Anyone who keeps the perspective of our history in mind must therefore be dissatisfied with Mr. Roosevelt's assertion that the Supreme Court decision in the Schechter case takes the Nation back to "the horse and buggy stage" which governed our economic life when the Constitution went into effect. It would perhaps be more reasonable to say that this decision takes the Nation back to the first, and of late much disregarded, principles of our system of government.

To emphasize only the enormous social and economic changes since 1787 is to indicate a desire to revise out of all recognition the Constitution under which the Nation in 150 years has made unparalleled material progress. By the same token, to emphasize only the rigid organic law, and not the implications of economic and social change, is to challenge the emotions of every man in whom the desire for rapid social betterment is instinct. Here are the vital strains revealed by the fundamentally legalistic opinion of the court and by the fundamentally emotional response of the President.

But supreme political significance is added to the President's remarks, as we said at the outset, by the striking fact that he is now denouncing a view dear to his party since the days of Thomas Jefferson. Mr. Roosevelt shows that he thinks his position liberal, and that of those who oppose centralization to be conservative or even reactionary. Such has not been the historic viewpoint of the Democratic Party. It has always claimed itself liberal, if not radical, in upholding States' rights, and it has attacked Republicanism as reactionary whenever it has extended centralized power over individual liberties, as Mr. Roosevelt now thinks so necessary.

So that what is the liberal and what is the reactionary attitude at this juncture is not so easily definable, except by narrow partisans. What is of much more moment than such unconvincing definitions is the fact that the President, breaking completely with Democratic tradition, has come out flatfooted for extension of the Federal power at the expense of the States. Of course that has long been implied by the New Deal, but heretofore always as a matter of temporary expediency rather than political philosophy.

Now the air is cleared. And the curtain rings up on another vital act in the epic struggle to maintain a Federal union.

Beneath The French Crisis.

Although the unbalanced state of the budget is the immediate cause of the political crisis which confronts France, the foundation of the trouble was laid when Great Britain and the United States abandoned the gold standard. The depreciation of the pound sterling and the subsequent depreciation and devaluation of the dollar have exerted a prolonged and relentless pressure upon world gold prices, with consequent damage to the export trade of the gold bloc countries of Europe.

France, like Switzerland, has also lost much lucrative tourist trade as a result of her relatively high costs in terms of depreciated currencies. Attempts to cut these, and to lower wages and salaries, have resulted in a growing economic depression characteristic of a period of deflation. That in turn has increased emergency demands upon the treasury, reduced current revenues, and added to the size of budgetary deficits. The burden of the heavy debt and an enormous military program are contributory causes of distress.

Nevertheless, the French budgetary problem would never have become so acute and sentiment in favor of devaluation would not have gained such headway, if the pound and the dollar had been maintained at a fixed ratio to each other and to the gold currencies of the world.

As Premier Flandin said in his address to the Chamber, "stabilization is the solution of the crisis." He emphasized that he had made great efforts in Washington and London to that end. The failure of his overtures probably means that France will now devalue her currency without awaiting an agreement between Great Britain and the United States. Monetary authorities question whether the immediate gains from devaluation would suffice to offset the economic losses or compensate for the blow dealt to the prestige of the government and the shock to creditor confidence. However, the arguments in favor of devaluation familiar to this country have influenced the French, too, as hope of an early stabilization agreement has grown dim.

Moreover, revaluation of the gold held by the Bank of France would yield a welcome nest egg which the treasury might seize, following the example set them by this country. While the economic problems that confront the French would not be solved by monetary manipulation, they, like other peoples, are lured by the hope of finding a painless solution of their fiscal difficulties. Furthermore, with the franc already devalued, they would be in a better strategic position to enter into later stabilization agreements with other countries.

No matter what the immediate outcome of the present crisis may be, the ultimate value of the franc in relation to other currencies will have to be determined by an international agreement to which Great Britain and the United States are parties. Competitive devaluation can not solve the problems of France or any other country, as experience has amply demonstrated. If France abandons the gold standard, it is safe to conclude that Switzerland will follow her example, regardless of the results of the referendum on the inflationary recovery program upon which her citizens will vote tomorrow. With the expected defection of Holland to follow, the world is likely to witness a period of exchange confusion and uncertainty that will add to the multiple existing impediments to foreign trade.

Stabilization of currencies by international agreement provides the only feasible remedy for an intolerable situation. The obstacles to such an agreement are not insuperable if the parties thereto are prepared to sacrifice a momentary and often fancied advantage in order to lay a foundation for improved world trade. In the words of the well-known British economist, Dr. T. E. Gregory, "So far from stabilization and a resumption of further activity in economic life being inconsistent with one another, they now seem to me, conditions being what they are, mutually complementary."

Perfect Irony.

The largest and perhaps fastest liner in the world is thrumming across the Atlantic on her maiden run. Modern in every detail of design and decor, the Normandie bears with it the hopes of all France in the dramatic competition for blue-ribbon honors.

Yet there is a note of irony in the dispatches of the correspondents assigned to report the events of the first run. In a special vault in the ship's hold an armed guard stands watch over 450,000,000 francs in gold, worth some $29,610,000. The coin and bullion have been shipped out of France by persons fearing imminent devaluation of French currency.

Thus the flower of French engineering skill, the fruition of French maritime tradition, is serving as an agent in draining away the lifeblood of French financial stability. It has a beveled piquancy which the French, above all other people, have the humor to appreciate.

Real Cost Of The Cotton Policy.

From the Kansas City Times.

The Administration has consented to extension of the Bankhead compulsory cotton production control plan for another year, and Senator Bankhead announces that the Government will continue to lend 12 cents a pound on this year's crop.

Last year more cotton was consumed outside of the United States than any year in history. Yet the world reduced its consumption of American cotton. The price was too high.

Can the South afford to continue a policy which threatens permanent loss of the world market for more than half its crop? Isn't it really paying for short-run prosperity out of the capital of its cotton farmers?

From the New Masses.

As The Communists See It.

During the temporary absence of Mr. Elderman, The Post's cartoonist, a symposium of editorial reaction to current national and foreign affairs will be published from day to day in this space. The reprinted drawings will not necessarily represent our own viewpoint, but are selected as reflections of considered opinions on the passing scene. The editors of The Post wish to make full acknowledgment of the courtesy of their contemporaries in granting permission for this procedure.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Government In Business.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The United States is a going business. It can expand by hiring 10,000,000 workers, paying those workers out of the products made by them exclusively. All business is like that, except that schemers sometimes divide the products unfairly. Gen. Johnson claims that the Government can increase its pay roll by only $4,000,000,000, but that leaves a gap of $45,000,000,000 national production to be filled by private industry. Why 4,000,000 additional workers should be the limit is not explained.

The difficulty so far has been that workers employed by the Government have received back as wages only part of the goods they have produced. For instance, the Government is now making a capital investment of $1,000 for each CCC worker in public improvements. Somewhere in the vicinity, capital value or rent of land increases more than enough to equal capital, interest and amortization costs of the public improvements. Of course, the Government does receive back part of the cost in direct taxes. However, not enough taxes are collected from beneficiaries, so nonbeneficiaries must make up the deficit, reducing net wages of the latter. This is what usually makes it appear that "Government in business" is not successful.

In effect, the Government, by all its activities, takes $40 per capita from its citizens and turns the money into a yearly fund for division among landowners alone. If this fund were retained by the Government, most governmental projects would prove to be financial successes. W. C. DUNCAN.

Adamstown, Md., May 25.

Franklin Square Needs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With $5,000,000,000 available, which the Administration is anxious to spend quickly, it is incomprehensible why those in authority can not obtain a few dollars with which to replace the wornout walks in Franklin Square.

The walks in this park, which is one of the most beautiful and most frequented in the city, have for years been in a disgraceful state of disrepair, and have now reached that point where in some places they are absolutely nonexistent. It is not surprising, therefore, that the suggestion is made from time to time that the park be converted into a space for storing automobiles.

A few men might also be advantageously put to work if the benches in this park were painted and overhauled. D. H. PARKER.

Washington, May 20.

Disfranchise Job Holders.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems to me the same holds true with us today as it did in 1776. The only notable difference is that the control of state has passed from the hands of the agriculturists to those of finance, banking and industry. The precipitation of the Revolution of '76 was not so much for individual freedom and liberty (at least 50 per cent of the population of the colonies were still loyal to the crown) as it was for the landed gentry to free themselves from an unjust burden of taxation.

There is, and can be no end to this vicious evolutionary cycle under a capitalistic system where all else is made subservient to the profit motive. Under this system, the ruling class become the arbiters of all laws that are made and imposed arbitrarily to maintain their domination and prestige.

Now we are on the eve of a change of cataclysmic proportions which has as its object the abandonment of the profit motive for a system of production for consumption and use, eliminating the competitive bid for control, the state becoming a common organ, having impartial laws and just and equal taxation based on income. In order for the state to function effectively, it will be necessary to disqualify those holding public office by withdrawing their rights of suffrage during incumbency.

On Abandoning Animals.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are several degrees of meanness, as many stories published since news became news, each vying in efforts to locate the meanest human. My vote goes to the city dweller who drives out a few miles into the country and heartlessly dumps kittens, small and large, to seek food and shelter (if any to be found) by the roadside.

This recently happened at my place. My dogs immediately took after the poor animals. We were obliged to put them in a cage—feed them and carry them to the Animal Rescue League, just where these heartless common species could have taken them in the first place.

"There ought to be a law," and I mean a severe one with a heavy penalty attached, for a person abandoning helpless animals in this fashion.

Only the most ignorant and degraded people do these things. Culture and refinement may well be gauged by treatment of dumb animals. MRS. J. A. DORSEY.

Berwyn, Md. May 27.

Custer's Fate.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The account of the romance of George Armstrong Custer and Elizabeth Bacon, by Elisabeth Ellicott Poe, in The Post of May 27 is admirable in style and in the evidences it discloses of an understanding of these two notable figures. In the main, also, it is marked by accuracy of detail—a rare merit in the average newspaper article on anything relating to Custer.

It errs badly, however, in its statement that the locks of the dead Custer "adorned the belt of a rejoicing Indian warrior" or that the "keen knives of Indian women" slashed his body. The testimony of those who identified the body is a unit as to the fact that it was not scalped nor otherwise mutilated. Just why it should have been spared the indignity visited upon most of the other 211 bodies found on that part of the field is a mystery that has never been solved. W. J. GHENT.

Washington, May 27.

Mustaches And Women.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A writer advocates the use of the electric needle to eliminate the beard, and so save the large amount of time spent in shaving. Why this horror at thought of a beard? Men let hair grow on the head, why not let it grow on the face? A man is ashamed of a bald spot on his head; yet he makes his entire face bald and shamelessly deprives himself of a beard, the symbol of manhood.

A beard or mustache gives strength, character and individuality to the face, and marks the difference between man and woman. In their hearts women like mustaches and beards and secretly admire and respect bearded men more than they do smooth-face men. Women pretend to dislike mustaches and beards simply because style—woman's master—has placed the beard under a ban.

The mustache and beard are coming back. With them will come back man's old authority over woman. No wife ever got a divorce from a bearded patriarch. A bearded man tries to live up to his beard.

The good Lord made the mustache and beard because He wanted men to wear them.

CHARLES HOOVER.

The Court's Abruptness.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Presumably, if unconstitutional at all, it was so at the moment of decision, and the Supreme Court could not permit the NRA any temporizing, tapering off, or breathing space for readjustment. A bolt out of the blue.

"Presumably" is used advisedly. If ever emergency consideration should have obtained, it were in that particular decision. Clapping an extinguisher over so widespread an economic movement in full functioning as the NRA, seems not even to have been listed among the possibilities; and even as an accomplished fact its effects are bewilderingly difficult to forecast. Many, the writer included, who may not have approved the measure, may perhaps criticize the court's abruptness, and millions more deplore its ruthless handing down.

GEORGE E. GARY.

Rome, Ga., May 30.

Real Marylander?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a subscriber to your paper, I would like to answer a letter in your paper of May 29 headed "Witness From Mexico" and signed by J. Marshall White. If Mr. White is a real Marylander he must be out of harmony with Christianity and the State of Maryland, whose founders were Catholics.

Only Saturday Gov. Harry W. Nice, at the unveiling of a statue of Freedom of Conscience at St. Marys City, paid tribute to the founders of Maryland. It would be well for Mr. White to read this splendid address on the history of his State and not attempt to vilify those who made it possible for him to worship God as he sees fit.

Regardless of Mr. White's statement, there is no freedom of conscience in Mexico and children are taught that there is no God.

Incredible Slovenliness.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter in The Post, signed by Theresa Rursell, deserves earnest consideration. I have been away from the city for two years and I am discouraged on its general messiness. The dirty streets, the broken trees, its slovenly driving (I have never seen such ignorant driving in any other city) the shabby street cars, the insouciance of street car conductors, both to passengers and to passing motorists, is incredible.

In fact, I do not like Washington to live in any more.

Post Office, Saturday.

"THOSE coffee-complaints in your column bring to my mind," writes a retired actor, "an experience I had many years ago.

"I was in New York 'summering' after a season of failures, and nearly penniless. Having grown tired of peanuts and buttermilk—sustaining fare, by the way—I ventured into an Eighth avenue restaurant which bore on its front the sign 'Dinner, 15 Cts.'

"The tables were long shelves attached to the wall. The seats were high stools. The waiter (there was but one) was a huge tough guy carrying a dirty napkin with which he dried the plates and the sweat of his brow. I didn't have to order; he knew his business. He brought a bowl of 'soup' which he tossed in front of me and went back for the rest of the dinner: a slice of meat of some sort, one tiny boiled potato and some beans—each in its little bird-bath.

* * *

"His third trip brought a thick, handleless cup containing some dark, muddy liquid. I timidly asked what it was, and he said it was 'cawfee.' Having tasted the soup, I told him I did not care for the coffee. He glared at me a second, then bawled:

"'Yer gota take it—it goes with the dinner!'

"And sandwiches? Have you ever gone into a delicatessen shop and bought a sandwich to take home, begging, beseeching, imploring the clerk to 'put butter on it'—and then when you got home and started to it, found it butterless? There's the sort of thing that causes dyspepsia."

"Accuracy and precision of statement usually combine to make so marked a characteristic of your delightful column that I was deeply surprised by the closing sentence of your recent comments on restaurants. You say that, nowadays, when the Post-Impressionist orders a ham-sandwich, he is 'always served a sandwich of ham-and-lettuce.'

"Either your statement is a flattering exaggeration," writes this fair correspondent, "or else the Post-Impressionist gets his sandwiches from some very elegent and exclusive hostelry not within the reach of the average office-clerk or shopper.

"What the latter receives when ordering a ham-sandwich is a sandwich of lettuce-and-ham, the ham being a minute fragment buried in the lettuce—just large enough to give it a slight flavor and to salve the indurated conscience of the restaurateur.

"In addition, the whole is swamped in mayonnaise."

"Swamped in mayonnaise!" repeats this correspondent: "For the matter of that, so is about everything else.

"The only thing that so far has escaped a deluge of mayonnaise is ice-cream.

"If the Post-Impressionist can not head a movement to bring back the real pre-war ham-sandwich"—in such words does the letter conclude—"can he not at least let the public know where it can get a ham-and-lettuce sandwich?"

* * *

The Post-Impressionist does sometimes lunch beyond his means. He never, however, likes to be told so—not even by the luncheon-bill.

Occasional lunching beyond his means is one of the few luxuries he can afford: the effects of his lunching beyond his means are beneficial to his readers. The process renews his wasted energies, and it supplies the sense (however false) of a large leisure, the air (however rarified) of a generous tolerance, whereupon depends his Column's chief charm.

These gains are our motive. We do not consider ourselves a bit better than the slaves of the mayonnaise-traffickers. At heart, if not at stomach, we are all for low living and high thinking.

Besides, those lunches beyond our means are infrequent. At all other noon-hours, we snatch the proletarian slices—and, wiping our fingers on the paper doily, give it all of the salad-dressing left from our waistcoat.

So, out of considerable cruel experience, we admit the soft impeachment concerning an unjust preponderance of letfuce and mayonaise over an oppressed minority of ham in the average 1935 ham-sandwich.

And we shall deem it an honor to accept the office proffered us, the leadership of a fearless movement for rehabilitating an old American institution: a long soft roll, a slice of ham to match (not less than a quarter-inch in thickness), butter in plenty, mustard to help yourself to, a stein of beer or a cup of real coffee—the whole for the fair price of one ten cents or one dime.

The Real Danger.

IT IS now becoming quite apparent that those who predicted serious trouble should the Supreme Court fail to uphold NRA, were not wholly without skill in propnecy. The trouble doesn't seem, however, to be appearing where they anticipated, on the industrial and business horizon. It is developing in the attitude of the New Deal.

The opponents of NRA contended that it was thwarting recovery and that if it was lifted, along with other retarding influences, that business would move up with a bang. On all sides it was assumed that after the Supreme Court decision the New Deal would give this contention a trial. This, they apparently have not the slightest intention of doing. Instead, it seems that we are to be faced with an Administration more aggressively on the warpath than ever before. We are in for, unless one misreads the signs, another year or more of bitter controversy. In such an event we can easily come again to the point where in our hysteria we will be begging Mr. Roosevelt to deliver us and willing to take any pill he hands out. In talking with New Dealers it is impossible to escape the conclusion that this is exactly the condition they would bring about.

One and all they are trying to create a state of feeling that it is an outrage that a little thing like the Supreme Court should be permitted to estop them from giving us the more abundant life and a great number of the Washington correspondents are crying with them all over the place.

At his Wednesday's press conference Mr. Roosevelt himself told a story that almost caused one to burst into tears. Besought for news about the NRA, he told the news hounds that ah, the story was not here, not here in Washington. The story was out in the country where injustices were being wrought, out where the underprivileged girl working in the garment factory got up wearily from her machine at closing time to go home only to be told by a heartless foreman that a rush order had come in and she had to work two more hours.

It doesn't seem to matter that no such story as that has come through. Newspapers have been unusually active in searching for instances of this return to "jungle" conditions, but they have, for some, been disappointingly few.

• • • •

Yet the stories in the country's leading newspapers without exception reflected Mr. Roosevelt's pessimism. A number of them reflected the particular story about the young garment worker. It was another instance, of course, of Mr. Roosevelt talking the story he wanted the boys to write.

The keynote of the stories out of Washington since the decision, in fact, has been that the Administration was waiting around for hell to break loose. Every little incident seeming to indicate this breaking loose is seized upon and magnified way beyond its importance. If the country doesn't get a severe case of the jitters in the next few weeks it won't be Washington's fault.

• • • •

Mr. Roosevelt's reluctance to accept defeat gracefully was emphasized at his press conference yesterday. Incidentally, it has served to bring his real attitude—that Washington should govern the most minute affairs of this country—out into the open. Because of his frequent statements heretofore about the responsibilities of State governments this attitude has been beclouded. It is not any more. As he says, the issue is very clear.

There remains the question as whether his remarks were intended as definitely committing him to the fight of imposing his ideas and those of his brain trusters upon the country. More likely they were intended as a feeler and his future conduct will be governed by the response. He will probably have considerable difficulty in getting the country aroused over the loss of the NRA alone. The fact is apparently overlooked that it was a dead Blue Eagle before the Supreme Court opened its mouth.

And there is a question as to whetner he is not exaggerating when he describes the decision as the most important in history. Really, the most the Supreme Court said was that his experiments were out. That's hardly taking us back to the "horse and buggy days."

But he can make it important. He can keep us in a stew for a long time.

Every Filipino A King

Communists And Sakdal Groups Find Ready Converts Among Uneducated And Poverty-Stricken Masses As Well As Middle Classes In Philippine Islands.

By Vicente Albano Pacis.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Manila.

ASIDE from having to cope with major economic and defense problems incident to its scheduled separation from the United States, the Philippines is confronted by an acute social problem characterized by excessive radicalism which, in a way, was signalized the other day by the arrest and prosecution of seven "Sakdalists" for having allegedly plotted to assassinate Manuel L. Quezon, president of the Senate and candidate for president of the commonwealth.

The coming of independence is not necessarily a contributing factor to this radicalism, but has become the occasion for a movement among the so-called oppressed masses to secure what they believe their manifest right under a democratic independent government. Ignorance, general poverty, self-seeking agitators, vast landed estates and the prevailing economic crisis have each contributed to goad the Filipino masses to the point where they demand a showdown.

So acute is the problem of radicalism getting to be that just the other day Brig. Gen. Basilio Valdes, chief of the Philippine constabulary, recommended to the insular government the outlawing of short-wave radio sets on the ground that Moscow propaganda through the ether is fast making Bolsheviks of the Filipino masses. Observers have also warned repeatedly that the "Sakdalists" and the Communists are fast becoming the minority party of the Philippines.

• • • •

RADICALISM in the islands has two recognizable spearheads: one is Communism undisguised, and the other is "Sakdalism," which is a purely Filipino concoction partaking of Hueylongism, Moscow and Hitlerism, and deriving its name from the Tagalog word "sakdal," meaning "accuser."

Local Communism is a mere copy of Russian Communism. As a matter of fact, many of the chief local agitators have long been suspected of receiving pay from Moscow. Giving credence to this belief is the recent arrest of the crew of a Russian ship which had entered Manila Harbor on the pretext of distress, but whose crew were later found holding secret confabs with local Communists both on board the vessel and in their Manila hideouts. While the Russians were later released and ordered to leave Philippine waters, there was never any doubt that they had come to contact local Communists.

Sakdalism is the more interesting because it has shown a greater capacity for growth and spread. As a matter of fact, it has three representatives in the legislature, and its center, strangely is Tayabas, the province of Senate President Quezon. The organization has planks which, though sounding absurd to intelligent citizens, have made converts of thousands of the credulous. And yet many of its converts are of the educated class and some of them are even in comfortable economic circumstances.

• • • •

ONE of these planks is the boast that the Sakdalist organization will secure complete Philippine independence before the year 1935 ends. This is a ridiculous promise but, as Senator Juan Sumulong, new critic of Quezon, says, many intelligent Filipinos have long been deluded by the absurd, ridiculous and irrealizable slogan of the major political parties of "immediate, complete and absolute independence."

Another Sakdalist bait is the vehement advocacy for strict government economy, based on the assertion that the present government is wasteful and extravagant. As the bureaucratic class in the Philippines has long been the luxurious class, driving the biggest automobiles and living in mansions, this war cry is very catchy among both the rabble who pays no taxes and the middle class who contribute but little to the government's support.

Most attractive and effective of all Sakdalist promises is the cutting down of the taxes to absurd minimums. During normal times, tax reduction can not fail to win people; during an economic crisis, the promise to be virtually relieved from taxes is like manna from heaven. The Sakdals started by advocating the abolition of the personal tax of two pesos a year per every male citizen of 18 years and over. So spontaneous was the response to this plank that the reigning party, sensing the situation, sought to steal a march on the Sakdals by indirectly abolishing the levy itself.

• • • •

BUT the Sakdals, aside from claiming the credit, immediately swung to other tax items advocating their radical reduction or total abolition. It is obvious, however, that the political parties who have long been fattening on public works and pork barrel can not keep pace with the Sakdals. Radicalism bordering on violence is not strange in the Philippines.

Despite the phenomenal accomplishments in public education under American rule, there continue to be more Filipinos of school age out of schol than in school. A great portion of the masses have not had the benefit of any schooling whatever. Their souls in the grip of ignorance and superstition, and their bodies under the yoke of exploitation, they are a ready material for any sort of revolutionary talk, and flare up with every condition that makes for mass despair.

Poverty is still rampant, and one of its causes is the system of vast landed estates which William Howard Taft started to abolish but which he left only half eliminated. Millions of tenants who have long lived on these estates have never improved their lot, have never acquired properties. As a matter of fact, they are often ejected—driven away like dogs from the only homes they and their forefathers have known. The Catholic church and old Spanish and Filipino firms own the bulk of these unbroken-up estates.

June And Its Old History

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

IT is curious that of the 12 months of the year, only three are first names for persons—two feminine and one masculine. May and June are very good names for girls and August is all right for boys. And why not April for girls and March for boys?

The Latin poet Ovid makes the goddess Juno declare that this month was named after her. Some writers think it was named after the consul Junius Brutus.

• • • •

In the earliest Latin calendar June came as the fourth month in the year, and tradition says it had originally 30 days.

Some time or other June lost a day, because when Julius Caesar fixed up the calendar June had only 29 days; and Julius added another, which June has kept ever since. It is such a very nice month, I wish it had 31, and I should not object if it had 60.

Midsummer Day is the twenty-fourth of June, the day of the nativity of St. John the Baptist. Here are some English proverbs connected with the day:

"Before St. John's Day we pray for rain; after that we get it anyhow."

"Cut your thistles before St. John; You will have two instead of one."

"Previous to St. John's Day we dare not praise barley."

"Rain on St. John's Day, and we may expect a wet harvest."

Pegasus Snorted

By

Ralph E. Renaud

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

WELL, it was wash day for the Muse all right, with all her underskirts hung out on the back fence to dry, but now she has donned her trailing robes once more and retired for another year to banks of asphodel on Mount Parnassus. All of which, of course, is just a fancy way of telling you that the annual Greenwich Village outdoor poetry show is a part of history.

And did Pegasus snort! We hope to tell you that the old horse felt his beans. When Greenwich Village goes lyric there is no stabling him, and he was kicking up a golden dust all over Washington Square South. Well not so golden, at that. The 30-odd bards (and some of them were extremely odd) represented in this yearly paroxysm of poetry were selling their products for 25 cents each, direct from the fence. But among the passers-by it seemed to be a case of many are called, but few come through. Some risked their two bits, but most remained just passers-by. Which proves that poets are borne and not paid.

The exhibit was sponsored by The Ravens, a group of Village Minnesingers shepherded by Francis Lambert McCrudden, who plucks the hearp a bit unhandily himself, but has a gift for culling budding Keatses, male and female. The Ravens were highly pleased with this year's exhibit and rather plumed themselves on its lack of commercial success. Not one of them croaked "Nevermore," and at the day's end all retired to their nests in various spaghetti dumps to scribble happily.

• • • •

REMEMBERING last autumn's invasion of the Village Artists' outdoor show by the cohorts of the Bronx, the Ravens penned a polite invitation in advance. So the Bronx descended by request on Washington Square to bring some purple patches as well as a lot of blue spelling. "Tremendous" turned out to be "tremenduous," which naturally gave the benefit of another fufoot (doggone it, if we're not writing that way ourselves!) and vermillion showed up with a single "el." Fortunately there was another El just down a block on Bleeker street. Miss Rose Stein, of the Bronx, proved to be no relation to Gertured, having worked her way gradually down town from Albany, where her poetry first sprouted eight years ago. Nevertheless there were echoes of Gertrude in the show in the vein of "Toasted Susie Is My Ice Cream."

Among the more redolent names of the Ravens is that of John Cabbage, poet laureate of the Department of Sanitation. Then there is Prince Robert Childe de Rohan d'Harcourt, of Oklahoma and points West. Likewise Miss Jane O'Ryan, sister of former Police Commissioner John F. O'Ryan. Also Miss Ida DuMond, who is so creative she likes to be known as "The Little Mother of the Navy," quite an undertaking in itself. Marie Margaret Marie Winthrop, who was smartly dressed, seemed a little out of place, even though her poems were printed in China.

• • • •

PERHAPS more typical was Miss Patricia Quigley, a nestling Raven only recently hatched from the greeting card industry. She paints her eyebrows and writes verses like this:

"I love to sit in old saloons
And watch a drunk yawn and stare idly
At a gray wall
While a barmaid with brass for hair
Smiles a broad message to
A fat man drinking beer.
I, who put a silver shoe
With gay abandon
On the polished chromium bar
At the Savoy."

Naturally, modern poets put their feet where they like—even on the Savoy bar, where it may be considered chummy. Miss Margaret Egri, on the other hand, gets her verses by wireless. She signs herself "A. M. 67" and when P. M. comes is generally in touch with "Etheric Agent 975," who hangs out somewhere in Eighteenth Century England and prods Miss Egri into automatic writing. Miss Egri calls this bombardment from Etheric Agent 975 "dear little etheric pellets which make me feel so gay." Yet you would never know she felt so gay from her verses, which strike a rather dismal note, thus:

"Over three places beyond a hill,
A sandy place and a window sill,
A red geranium and a marble cross,
Heaven's gain and Scotland's loss."

Miss Egri's verses, as well as Miss Egri herself, excited considerable attention. One determined-looking female stepped up to the fence where they were displayed, copied several and then departed without saying a word or depositing anything in the cash box.

And so, gentle reader, you can afford to splash at least a brief tear upon these scribblings on the fence. Do not dismiss them merely as the crackling of nuts over the fire of youth. There may be something in them more than meets the eye. Don't forget that Edna St. Vincent Millay was once a full-fledged Village poet, fully half as crazy as the Ravens are. And look at her now—the clearest singing voice we have.

VERY CHOICE SELECTIONS OF GOODS FOR HOT WEATHER WEAR IN OUR FAMOUS MEN'S SHOP

Unusual assortment of Suits, linens, gabardines, wools . . . and our wonderful "Icemere" suits so cool and smart for hot days . . . Separate sports coats and trousers . . . and for outdoors, our well-cut golf slacks and Greenbrier Sportswear.

In addition, we have choice variety of straw hats . . . the best made shoes (including the Edwin Clapp lines which we handle exclusively here) and wonderful stocks of Furnishings.

"Mama," whispered little Willie as the great conductor took his place in the orchestra pit and the famous soprano began her aria, "what's the man shaking the stick at her for?"

"Shut up!" Mama explained. "That's his baton. He isn't shaking it at her."

"Then what's she hollerin' for?"

That, we are sad to report, is little Willie's reaction to good music. The case of his sister is even worse. She just loves to prattle about how much she adores good music, but when she has an opportunity to listen to a great symphony she stays home and tunes the radio to Cab Calloway's band. She thinks that arpeggio is an island in the Pacific and that Chaikovski was a Russian general. You see, little Willie and his sister have not read the excellent articles by Ray C. B. Brown in The Washington Post; and, therefore, are not en rapport with things musical. But there is hope for them even now, and we are starting a subscription to The Post for them in order that they may learn the intellectual pleasure to be derived from listening to classical music.

Mr. Brown is one of America's best known music critics, and his authoritative, intelligent, sensitive articles are required reading for music lovers. Washington is becoming more and more music conscious, and The Post is proud of the part Mr. Brown has played in explaining the works of great composers to new listeners. For two years he was managing editor of Musical America and his writings are studied closely by students. In his "Postlude" column, discussing the programs presented by symphony orchestras, choral groups and others, he strikes a new note in criticism.

Like his good friend, Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, the "tune detector," Mr. Brown can listen to Tin Pan Alley's latest song hit and tell you instantly the symphony from which the theme was stolen, and, if you question him closely, he might remember the older work from which the symphony composer borrowed a few bars!

In The Sunday Post you'll find an entire page devoted to music, and the leading article, always written by Mr. Brown, will give you a deeper, more sympathetic understanding of all things musical. Nowadays, when Stravinski's "Firebird" suite is discussed at the dinner table along with the New Deal and Europe's war scare, you'll find Ray C. B. Brown's brilliant articles of great help in convincing your hostess that you, too, can recognize Bloch's "Schelomo" and that you can discuss Hindemith with the best of them. If you are a lover of good music you'll appreciate his clear, authentic criticisms; if you are just learning to listen to the great symphonies you'll demand his help. You'll find it in

The Rev. James H. McBroom, who for five years has been minister of the Fourteenth Street Church of Christ, will preach his last sermon before that congregation tomorrow. He will leave Washington soon to take a pastorate in Atlanta, Ga.

The Rev. Mr. McBroom began his duties at the local church in September, 1930. He has been full-time minister there since that time, but because of his interest in the cause of evangelism has used his vacation periods for preaching elsewhere. He has occupied pulpits in 14 States.

Since the Rev. Mr. McBroom assumed leadership of the Fourteenth Street Church the congregation has more than doubled its size and is now the largest Church of Christ in the Northern Atlantic seaboard region.

As a part of his ministry, the pastor has taught Bible classes and has devoted particular attention to his Young People's Class, which now has 60 members.

What Religion Means to Me

By Lieut. Maj. H. Mills Eroh, District Commander, Volunteers of America.

When you hear a person say "they can not see anything in religion," it is a pretty sure evidence they need their windows cleaned. It is not religion, but the lack of it that makes people unhappy.

To me, religion is the worship of and faith in God as exemplified by Jesus Christ. That religion has proven to be of priceless worth to me. It has given me a clearer understanding of my duty to others and is becoming more and more the revelation to me of man's relationship to God.

Very early in life I discovered that when a man wants to find the way to God he will find it an easy matter when he gets to the end of his own way. Some truths come in the heart, not in the head; we get them on our knees, not in a college or place of learning. Many years ago a wise old philosopher said, "Of many books there is no end, and much learning is a weariness of the flesh. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

God has given us the best age in the history of the world in which to live. He has given us the greatest opportunities ever given to any generation of young men. Science, art and literature, with the accumulation of centuries of research, places their priceless discoveries at our disposal. God Himself stands back of all this and says, "Young man, give Me thine heart." And when you do that, you have found the key to the highest attainments and the greatest success in the world. And along with that the assurance of an inheritance for the future life.

The new aspect of our problems today is but a challenge to the ambitions of young men and women; the religion of Jesus Christ helps us to meet the challenge.

The religion of Jesus Christ is more to me than a story or picture; it is a real mental, moral, spiritual force in the heart and life. The great need of the world today is not more men and women with well-filled heads, but more people with the warmth of Jesus' love in their hearts; that will stand in the shop, the office, behind the counter and on the street and talk about the power of Jesus Christ to save and of His great love for those who have missed the mark or fallen short of measuring up to the standard. The world today needs the touch of love from the Christ-filled life.

"Ancient and Modern Necromacy, alias Mesmerism and Hypnotism, Denounced," is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The golden text is from Psalms 92:7: "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." (Ephesians 6:13).

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science Text Book, "Science and Health With Key to Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: The wicked man is not the ruler of his upright neighbor. Let it be understood that success in error is defeat in Truth. The watchword of Christian Science is Scriptural! "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts" (page 239).

Roosevelt Sees 50-Year Setback in Court's Blow at New Deal

President Asks People Face Nation's Crisis

power to control crops and if that is abandoned, he predicted, it means 36-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton.

He maintained that the decision had destroyed the power of the Federal Government to regulate the liquor industry and argued that the States were impotent to enforce their own laws against shipments from the outside—a statement which took no account of the second section of the repeal amendment to the Constitution.

Despite these sweeping statements, the President paused now and then to point out that many of the implications of the decision flowed from the obiter dicta—the side remarks—it contained. Obiter dicta, he once pointed out, was not always followed in subsequent decisions. Again, he pointed out that the implications he deplored were predicated on the assumption that the court in subsequent decisions would confirm the views expressed in the NRA case.

Taken as a whole, the President's remarks were interpreted as meaning that if he does not press for an amendment of the Constitution to give the Federal Government more explicit control over commerce, he is hopeful that the country would so forcefully express its hostility to the State's Rights doctrine enunciated by the court that the latter would abandon or modify it in subsequent rulings.

The first reaction to the President's exposition of the situation facing the country was not wholly favorable to him. In some quarters, it was believed it had over-drawn the crippling effects of the NRA decision, while on Capitol Hill many Democrats joined with Republicans in opposing any constitutional amendment.

Careful Deliberation.

The President revealed his reaction to the epochal Supreme Court decision of last Monday after apparently careful reflection and deliberation and after consulting for four days with some of the best legal minds in the country. He had surveyed every aspect of the situation.

From the first it was apparent that the Supreme Court had done more than invalidate the live poultry code and declare unconstitutional the NRA. It was clear that the decision would have far-reaching consequences, severely crippling, if not wrecking most of the New Deal measures, as well as legislation pending in Congress.

But it was not until yesterday that it was revealed that the President was convinced that the decision had stripped from the Federal Government all authority over social and economic problems, except as they were involved in the actual transportation of goods, plus a few transactions directly affecting goods in transit.

Such is the President's view as expressed by him yesterday. He predicated that view apparently chiefly on the Supreme Court's reiteration in the NRA decision of an excerpt from a previous opinion in which it was held that "building is as essentially local as mining, manufacturing or growing crops."

Vigorous Statement.

Again and again, the President referred to that quotation as he talked one and a half hours to a room crowded with correspondents. Frequently he gesticulated with a copy of the court's decision to stress his words, which throughout were vigorous and, at times, ironical and satirical. One or twice he injected a light observation into his remarks, but so deadly serious was the conference, so tensely were all present clinging to his train of thought that these passed almost unnoticed.

Quietly sitting to one side in the rear of the President, knitting, was Mrs. Roosevelt. Present also was Senate Democratic Leader Joe Robinson, who came to the White House on other business, but eagerly took the opportunity of attending perhaps the most dramatic press conference since the New Deal was inaugurated.

Under the rules of the White House press conference the President may not be directly quoted without his specific permission and, except for one phrase, that permission was not given, nor was the official shorthand transcript of his remarks made available. But his statement as taken down in long hand may be approximately given.

He started by saying he had been impressed by the tone of the letters and telegrams he had received regarding the NRA decision, some of them rather pathetic, in their appeal to him to do something. These indicated the faith of the country in the ability of the Government to continue the control of industry in the interest of industry and the country as a whole, he said.

3,000 Messages.

Between 2,000 and 3,000 messages had come to him by Thursday night and he had not yet been able to examine those received yesterday morning. This outburst of appeals, he said, indicated the country is beginning to realize that in the long run something will have to be done and the hope that it should be started immediately.

These messages, however, also illustrated that the country had not been given a clear explanation of the nature of the NRA act and the structure of the live poultry code.

He came to the sentence in which the court held that extraordinary conditions do not call for extraordinary power, although extraordinary remedies might be called into play. He thought that an interesting statement. In effect, the President observed, the court held that no matter what emergency may exist a law must be constitutional. It might take Congress a month or two to determine whether its action was in conformity with the Constitution and then it might not definitely know.

During the World War days much legislation was passed that was more violative of the strict interpretation laid down by the Supreme Court than any legislation passed since 1933. Such legislation never reached the Supreme Court, perhaps because the war ended before there was time. Now the court ruled no emergency created extraordinary powers outside of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court, he explained, then ruled that the NRA act delegating authority to the President or a commission did not specifically state a standard of action. That was not so important, he added, because the language of the act could be improved to conform to the court's requirements, such as the Federal Trade Commission act. Actually only one code had been imposed on an industry—the liquor code. The delegation of power part of the decision was not insurmountable and therefore not so serious, the President reiterated.

But then the court got down to something else — interstate commerce, he continued. Important implications flowed from what the court had to say about that. Why was it, he asked, that so many of the messages on his desk were futile? Because the authors do not realize what that part of the decision means. The court did not stop with the chickens or poultry case at hand, he pointed out.

The President pointed out that obiter dicta were not always followed but it was significant that by obiter dicta, at least, the Supreme Court had gone back to 1885 to the Knight case limiting interstate commerce to goods actually in interstate transmission. Since that time, he added, the court had greatly enlarged the scope of this decision in cases affecting coal, railroads and other matters. It had become the general opinion in Congress and among attorneys that interstate commerce embraced not only actual transmission of goods but many things which affected interstate commerce.

Recalls Railroad Case.

The President recalled that when the Long Island Railroad wished to abandon an 8-mile branch line from Flushing to Fort Jefferson, the New York Public Service Commission refused to give its consent on the ground that many persons would be inconvenienced. The railroad, he said, appealed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that agency, acting under delegated President stressed—ruled the carrier had a right to abandon a branch line, even though it operated only on Long Island, because it was so intimately related to interstate commerce.

The whole tendency of the court, the President continued, has been to view the commerce clause in the light of present-day life and to extend its application.

When the Constitution was written, containing the commerce clause for the regulation of commerce between the several States, the country was in the "horse and buggy age," Mr. Roosevelt observed. Each section of the country was self-supporting and 90 per cent of trade was intrastate. Its purpose was to prevent tariff barriers between the States and apparently in fear of the lawyers of that day the founding fathers wanted to prevent any devices under which one State might discriminate against another.

States Rights Comment Issued by Shouse Rouses Robinson To Defend Roosevelt's Constitutional Views on NRA Crisis

Liberty League Head Charges President Has Deserted States.

White House hints that a constitutional amendment may be needed to salvage NRA wreckage brought an unfavorable reaction from the Capitol yesterday, and injected States' rights into politics.

Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson replied sharply to a statement by Jouett Shouse, president of the American Liberty League, that the President "has renounced entirely the (Democratic) theory of States' rights."

Robinson retorted the President did no such thing at yesterday's press conference, which the leader attended. All the President had done, said the Senator, was to "point out that the practice which is implied by the recent Supreme Court decision went back 50 years in its definition of a limitation of Federal powers."

Congress Not So Willing.

While the Shouse-Robinson controversy was raging, general opposition developed at the Capitol to suggestions of constitutional revision thrown out by the President.

A broad cross-section of Democrats joined with Republicans in condemning the constitutional amendment route as a way out of NRA difficulties.

There were only a few exceptions to this generally adverse reaction, and these were mostly well qualified.

Describing the President's White House discussion as a "remarkable statement," Shouse issued a broadside insisting the President now "takes the view that all economic and social problems should be controlled by the Federal Government, regardless of the clear limitations of the Constitution."

In a hot retort, issued by the Democratic National Committee, Robinson countered that what the President actually implied was that "if interstate commerce is limited to goods in transit, regulation of industries affecting the entire country would be left to the enactment of the 48 States, with no security that these would be uniform, and that consquently there might ensue a period of 36-cent wheat and 5 cent cotton."

Senator Borah Sharp.

Sharpest of the shafts came from Senator William E. Borah, (Republican), Idaho, Senate constitutional authority, who declared there is "plenty of power, absolute power, to deal with all national problems."

"We don't need a constitutional amendment nearly so much as we need someone to draw bills in accordance with the Constitution," Borah said. "You can't draw a bill on great subjects of this nature as you would draw a resolution for a town meeting. Let it be understood that the construction which the Supreme Court has placed on the interstate commerce clause gives ample and complete plenary power to deal with all matters of national concern."

Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, led the senatorial Republican attack with a statement that "it is better to return to the horse and buggy days with its security, than to dispense with State lines and make this one centralized government."

"Instead of trying to fit the New Deal program into the concept of the Federal Constitution, they have had the mistaken notion that the Constitution must follow the New Deal," Hastings said.

Pope Backs President.

Senator James P. Pope, of Idaho, was one of the few Democrats who whole-heartedly subscribed to the President's views. He stepped out several paces beyond them.

"The public welfare comes first," Senator Pope said. "If the Constitution gets in the way, it must yield."

Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary said the Supreme Court "has placed clear limitations about the Congress."

"Within those limits, Congress can enact legislation of a voluntary character that will be helpful to industry and labor," he insisted.

"I think that should be done as soon as possible, so Congress can adjourn."

Nye Criticizes Proposal.

Opponents of the Blue Eagle were in the forefront of the critics:

"They will wait a long, long while before they get any strong sentiment for a renewal of NRA as it has been administered," said Senator Gerald P. Nye, (Democrat), North Dakota.

"When they could get only a thousand business men to come to Washington to plead for NRA, you can bet your life no great sentiment exists for it.

"As for a constitutional amendment, ratification would take a long time. When you consider how long the child labor amendment has been pending, and what delays it has met, there is not much hope for the type of amendment that is now being discussed."

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, author of the temporary NRA extension resolution recently approved by the Senate, said simply:

"I had assumed that the question of Federal and State government under the Constitution had been settled for 160 years."

Shouse Sees the Issue.

Shouse charged the President "would seek to abolish our dual form of Government and the system of checks and balances between the legislative, executive and judicial brances."

Shouse said a "clear issue" is presented. Aligned against the President, he declared, are "those who believe in the Constitution, who believe in orderly government, who believe in American institutions, who believe that the nine members of the Supreme Court who unanimously rendered their decision, performed courageously and patriotically the clear duty assigned them. * * *

"The President well says that the American people must make an important decision. But it is not one that can wait, as he suggests, for five or ten years. It should be made at the earliest opportunity."

Robinson, in his reply to Shouse, declared the President was careful to say "that his utterance was not a criticism of the Supreme Court, but was merely an effort to make clear what the decision meant socially and economically."

"And the President further said he welcomed the decision, as it clarified the issue," continued Robinson.

Robinson Shows Sarcasm.

"If mining and manufacturing, and even farming, are to be classified as intrastate enterprises merely because the point of production is in one locality, though the products radiate all over the country, the ability of the Government to legislate as to the purity of food, etc., is hampered, if it is not destroyed.

"His critics might as well urge that the enactment of the Federal law against kidnaping and against the gangs of bank robbers, etc., was a tyrannical invasion of State rights as to argue, as does Mr. Shouse, of the so-called Liberty League, when he accuses the President of desiring to assume unlimited power because he sought to put an end to chiseling in trade, to the sweatshop and to child labor by means of codes—codes enforced, by the way, by the industries themselves, and under which the country has advanced from a state of utter prostration to a reasonable approach to prosperity."

Other Capitol comment follows:

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan:

"I don't think the President has any thought of emulating Mussolini, Hitler or Stalin, but his utterance as I have heard it is exactly what these men would say about the American picture if they were called upon to diagnose it.

"In order to accept his philosophy, you've got to accept the fundamentals of the New Deal, which is that the institutions of America, as we knew them up to 1929, have broken down, and prosperity never can be restored on the old basis. I do not accept this theory."

Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah:

"I don't agree with what the President said. The American people are still here and the American Constitution is still here, and both of them are as vital as they ever were. This is no time for lamentions or pessimistic declarations."

Senator L. J. Dickinson (Republican), of Iowa:

"I'm for the New Deal following the Constitution, rather than the Constitution following the New Deal."

Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas:

"By the time a constitutional amendment could be adopted, the depression will be over. We can take care of the next depression when it comes. I would be very slow to vote for a constitutional amendment."

Representative John J. O'Connor, New York Speaker pro-tem of the House:

"The course is for Congress to enact a law extending NRA for interstate businesses and to authorize States to make compacts on regulation of businesses within State borders."

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher (Democrat), Florida:

"I don't think we should amend the Constitution, if that's what's implied."

Senator M. M. Logan (Democrat), Kentucky:

"Perhaps I would be in favor of a constitutional amendment, but it may be there are other ways of meeting this situation; for example, by compacts between the States, authorized by Congress. The Supreme Court has narrowly defined interstate commerce as transportation."

Senator Edward P. Costigan (Democrat), Colorado:

"The President apparently was endeavoring to invite public opinion to bear for a solution of a problem. The group of statutes adopted by Congress in the last two years indicated the common recognition of the necessity for bringing national remedies into play to meet national necessities."

Amendment Held the Way.

Senator Alva B. Adams, (Democrat), Colorado:

"Clothes cut for 140 years ago won't fit the New Deal. I don't see any way for it except by constitutional amendment."

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, (Democrat), Montana:

"I'm willing to go along on a constitutional amendment only insofar as concerns wages and hours. I voted against NRA."

Senators Borah and Nye elaborated their remarks. Borah was critical of Government lawyers who, he said, have attempted through legislation to stretch the bounds of the Constitution. "They wouldn't know how to draw bills to fit the Constitution, even if it were amended," he said.

Nye expressed doubt that two-thirds of the Senate would approve submission of a constitutional amendment, pointing out that a majority was never mustered to extend NRA as the Administration proposed. He said his State would never countenance "such centralization of power over intrastate business as is now evidently contemplated."

First Legislative Step to Conform to Supreme Court's Ruling.

ing for daily reports on lengthening of hours and wage cutting by employers. They were also asked to report on the use of child labor and discharge of employes for union activities.

Discounts Court Ruling.

In spite of White House avowals that he is just one of many being consulted, the frequent visits of Gen. Johnson to the Executive offices have led to the report that he is taking a major part in formation of the Administration's new policy. In his recent radio talk Johnson said he believed that Congress could write a law making specific the President's power in continuing at least part of the NRA. He did not place any great importance on the court's ruling concerning interstate commerce, the ruling which President Roosevelt said deprives the Government of much of its authority.

The frequent appearances of Johnson at the White House and some of his slightly veiled utterances about the conduct of the NRA case appear to have widened even further the rift between him and Donald R. Richberg, chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board. Richberg, however, also has offered President Roosevelt suggestions for new NRA legislation.

Appearance of Raskob at the White House recalled the fact that early in the depression and before the New Deal program was formulated he proposed a plan of business cooperation that somewhat resembled NRA.

Congress Marks Time.

Congress, meanwhile, continued to mark time. The House adjourned until Monday, completing a full week of inactivity. The Senate was considering the utilities holding company bill.

A group of House members was considering a proposal for a constitutional convention. Representative Maverick (Democrat), Texas, said a meeting of the group would be held soon. He is planning to outline the proposal in a radio talk. A constitutional convention can be called only upon demand of legislatures of two-thirds of the States and its acts must be ratified by three-fourths of the States.

Maverick predicted that the ruling holding the Frazier-Lemke act unconstitutiotnal would result in 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 persons being put off their farms. He also predicted widespread strikes as a result of the NRA ruling.

Representative Keller (Democrat), Illinois, announced he would call a meeting, next week, of the Liberal bloc of which he is chairman, to consider the proper course for "insuring the economic safety of the Nation."

The tenth amendment to the Constitution, Keller pointed out, says "powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Keller said it would be proposed at the Liberal assembly to make the amendment declare that powers not delegated to the States nor prohibited to them are reserved for the United States.

Sees Return to Prosperity.

On the other hand, Representative Taber (Republican), New York, predicted that the country will return to prosperity in which every able-bodied man will have a job, if NRA is allowed to die.

Agriculture Department officials predicted the Frazier-Lemke ruling would "make little difference." They pointed out that only about 1,000 farmers have sought to take advantage of the moratorium provisions of the act.

Parties Given By Mullens and Blooms

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Two delightful cocktail parties yesterday afternoon, one at the home of Representative and Mr. Sol Bloom in honor of Mlle. Marie Petroff, sister of the Charge d'Affaires of Bulgaria, Mr. Stoyan Petroff Tchomakoff, and lady in waiting to the Queen of Bulgaria, and the other at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Mullen in Georgetown for Miss Nancy Grimes, of Tacoma, Wash., sister of Mr. Charles P. Grimes, who is visiting with her brother and sister-in-law at their home, also in Georgetown.

At the Blooms the party took place in the patio of their home, a lovely place in the Italian style, overlooking a beautiful garden in the center of a large fountain with pond lilies and a variety of Oriental fish, and overhead a trellis, from which great clusters of purple wisteria hung and trailed down the columns of the patio. It was a cool and delightful sight which greeted the eyes of the guests who came in from the hot streets; pale green wicker furniture, ladies in pale summer frocks and men in spotless linen. A buffet with the most delicious hors d'oeuvres for those who took cocktails, and tiny cream puffs topped with strawberries, and small chocklate cakes for those who drank the delicious and refreshing iced tea with sprigs of mint. Mrs. Bloom wore an afternoon frock of sheerest black chiffon printed with tourquoise blue, and a large black hat, and Miss Bloom was in a gown of deep blue and green chiffon.

Bulgarian Summers Prized.

Guests came and went, but many were just leaving the patio to look at other rooms of the house, which is a treasure trove of lovely things from Italy and other countries of Europe. Mlle. Petroff, wearing a sheer black frock with a scarf of pale blue crepe and a black hat, was greeted on all sides, and many said a farewell to her as she left, for she will sail on June 5, to return to Sofia, to resume her interesting duties from which she has been absent several months. Mlle. Petroff says that June is the most lovely month of the year in Bulgaria, for it is then that the roses, from which much of the perfume used by the ladies of the world is made, are in full bloom. There is a valley, not far from Sofia, 40 miles long and 10 miles wide, planted entirely in roses of every hue, and from the mountain roads on either side of the valley, tourists look down on the colorful scene. If she is fortunate enough to be there when the peasants start gathering the petals it is a sight unsurpassed, for all wear their bright native costumes, and drive through the aisles of blooms in carts drawn by oxen, much as the Romans used centuries ago.

Mme. Petroff was there in a cool printed frock of white with tiny sprays of white scattered over it, and a large white hat trimmed with black. She will be leaving shortly for Sugar Hill, N. H., where she and her husband with their two small children will spend the summer months.

Mme. Florescu Present.

Mme. Florescu, wife of the Counselor of the Rumanian Legation, was also there in a frock of blue and white printed crepe, with a large blue hat trimmed with white roses; and that gay quintette which has become so popular with the young diplomats of Washington—the three daughters of the Ambassador of Chile and the two daughters of the Cuban Ambassador. All were in white summer frocks with touches of bright color, blue, red and green, carried out in belts and hats. They were soon joined by Miss Nella Veverka, daughter of the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Veverka, and Miss Florence Harris, both in smart linen frocks, and soon the entire group was surrounded by a gathering of young men.

Others there were Miss Mary Louise Johnson, Miss Janet Hall; the Secretary of the Swiss Legation, Mr. Ernest Schlatter; Mr. Harry Willard, of the State Department, and Mr. Robert F. Kelley, also of the department, and the Charge d'Affaires of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Baron, the latter in a frock of pale rose crepe with a smart brown hat.

At the Mullens' home the party was in the grand old garden, which is hedged with rambler roses and honeysuckle, all in full bloom. The party was really given by Mr. J. Arthur Mullen and Mr. George Shea, but Mrs. Mullen was on hand to greet the guests, wearing a gown of black chiffon printed with pastel colors. She and Mr. Mullen entertained at a dinner last evening at the Shoreham, and later in the afternoon several of their dinner guests arrived for a cocktail, among them Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley and Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Kremer. It was very informal with everybody asking for whatever they wanted, and the guest of honor looking very lovely in pale blue crepe with a small white hat and a corsage of huge gardenias. The marriage of young Mr. Mullen to Miss Exilona Hamilton, daughter of Mrs. Frank Hamilton, will take place on Wednesday in the chapel of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York, and everybody was wishing him well and congratulating him. It will be a small wedding, attended only by members of the two families and a few very close friends. The bride will be unattended and Mr. Mullen will have as his best man, Mr. Paul Massey, of Omaha. Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. Mullen and his bride will sail for Europe, returning to Washington in the late summer to make their home.

Among Those Present.

Proper Gloves Are Important Style Factors

Ensemble Falls Flat if Hands Are Not in Harmony With Other Attire.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

WHAT'S the use of having a new dress, a new hat and a new pair of shoes if you aren't going to complete your outfit with just the right pair of gloves? You know yourself that no matter how smart the ensemble it falls flat if your gloves strike the wrong keynote. If they are old and worn out that's bad enough. But it's just as deplorable when they're the wrong type. You wouldn't wear a wide-brimmed, lacy garden hat with your English tweed sport suit, would you? You wouldn't wear golf oxfords with your billowy chiffon? Why then be negligent when it comes to matching your gloves to the style of your costume?

You may easily ascertain just what gloves go with each dress if you'll take time out in the glove section of a downtown store. Here you'll find the season's fashion story dramatized from the glove angle. You'll see five different types of gloves displayed to perfect advantage, and you can decide just which ones you need to annex to your wardrobe.

"Ships" is the whimsical name for one sporty pair. These were designed by a stylist who felt there was a decided demand for them in the up-to-date feminine wardrobe. They're so short they barely reach the wrist. The opening is so wide you can slip your hand into it with the greatest of ease. There are no fancy fastenings to bother with. It's just in you go and there you are! Rows of perforations supplement the usual three rows of stitching on the back, and more perforations on the palm complete the air conditioning. You will find "Slips" ideal for street wear, driving, golfing, and even tennis. The story goes that at Biarritz and other European resorts women lounge on the beach in abbreviated suits plus these abbreviated gloves.

For dressy clothes there's a novelty mesh glove with large lace cuffs. These may be counted on to give that feminine touch. Incidentalally they're quite easy to keep clean. White only.

For cocktail dresses see the sheer Mousseline de Soies with the abundantly flaring cuffs. Here's a model that fits like the skin on your hand. Navy, black, brown and white.

Something a little out of the ordinary for that particular dress is a washable doeskin, pink as a strawberry ice cream cone. Their eight-button length suits them exactly to the midway sleeve.

Table Lamp Sale.

Opportunity is pounding on your door! Do hear what he has to say.

"Well — what then?" we'd like to know.

"Oh, not just a sale," he whispers. This is the tale he tells:

This store was lucky enough to purchase a manufacturer's complete line of table lamps ranging in size and style from this and that to the other. While they last these lamps will sell for amazingly low prices. As low as $2.65! Nothing higher than $13.85! They have bases of alabaster, genuine Minton china, and pottery, and are complete with beautiful harmonizing shades of silk and novelty fabrics.

"Now," continues Opportunity, "is your chance to add new charm to your home—or, for that matter, somebody's else. For where can you find a more suitable, and ever-welcome wedding gift for such a small sum of money?"

Observer Notes Progress Of Women in Public Life

Contrary to the widespread belief that women today are indifferent to public affairs, they are becoming increasingly "politically conscious" and are making a definite effort to study and evaluate government, according to Miss Harriet Elliott, of the Democratic National Committee.

Miss Harriet Elliott, Head of Democratic Study Group, Finds Wide Interest in Government During Long Tour.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

WOMEN MAY BE "advancing backwards." They may be losing their hard-won rights—as many persons believe—through an apparent indifference to their own welfare. And, willingly or otherwise, they may be discarding all outside interests in favor of the domestic life and its concomitant "kneading and breeding." But Miss Harriet Elliott, director of study for the women's division, Democratic national committee, does not think so. She believes they are just now coming into their own as important factors in public life.

She is convinced that, more than ever before, they are making an intensive effort to become intelligently politically-minded; that many who were formerly content to sit back and let men run the Government are now beginning to realize they have a definite contribution to make, and that today they are just as interested in government as many of their sons, husbands and brothers.

Recently back from an extensive trip through Southern, Middlewestern and far Western States, where she conducted city, State and regional institutes of government, Miss Elliott reports that women throughout the country are becoming "politically conscious" in a big way and are spending much time and study in "scientifically analyzing governmental problems.

Many Problems Discussed.

In each institute Miss Elliott held there were discussions of the fundamental forms of government, the Constitution and the ways it might be interpreted, and the recovery agencies—their aims and problems.

The discussions naturally led to a detailed study of the Constitution and the ways in which it could be interpreted to suit present needs. "From what I observed," she said, "there is a real desire among women to keep intact the basic principles on which our Government is founded. Nevertheless, they recognize it is virtually imperative to interpret those principles in the light of applying them to modern problems."

"Women also realize that human well-being is largely dependent on effecting a balance between opposing groups such as capital and labor, urban and rural, agricultural and commercial interests. Feeling it is the duty of a democratic government to bring about this balance, women have a sense of responsibility about helping their government effect the balance."

Miss Elliott pointed out that woman's expanding role in the political scene is not governed by whether she is the home-loving or career-type of person.

"All women (as well as all men) agree that the home is the real basis of national progress," she said, "but women are now awakening to the fact that subsidiary economic institutions must be stabilized before the home can have a chance. Where there is no pay envelope to support a family, a woman can't be much of a homemaker."

The depression emphasized the need for stabilization of all institutions directly or indirectly connected with the home, Miss Elliott said, consequently, women are now becoming aggressively interested in politics. Without being dogmatic in their attitudes as to what can be done to improve existing affairs, they are "calmly curious" about ways and means to effect the balance between opposing factions, she added.

In the educational program she carried out from coast to coast, the recovery program in all its phases was discussed in detail, Miss Elliott said. The security bill was studied down to the finest point and analyzed throughly from virtually every point of view, she reported.

She was particularly encouraged that so many young women took an active part in the institutes and were so obviously eager to learn what they could do to promote effective government. But the interest in this was not confined to any certain age group, for women old and young were "deeply concerned with what is going on in our country."

Miss Elliott is now preparing to go through the New England States, conducting the same types of institutes.

Active in the campaign for suffrage, Miss Elliott has kept closely in touch with the woman's movement in the United States. As a teacher of political science in the Women's College, University of North Carolina, for the last 22 years, she has been particularly interested in woman's part in public life.

Picnic Lunch Dishes to Win Contest Prizes

HERE is a riddle we want you housewives to answer: Is there such a thing as a cake that won't crumble, fried chicken that will taste good when cold as well as hot, a sandwich that won't become soggy and a beverage that is refreshingly different? If you know the answer enter your solution in the form of a recipe in The Post's recipe contest for picnic dishes that win.

Three prizes, $3, $2 and $1, will be awarded to the person submitting the best suggestions for picnic luncheons. All recipes should be sent to Dorothea Duncan, home economics editor of The Washington Post. Only one entry from each contestant will be considered for a prize.

Type your recipes if possible. If not, write them neatly in ink. Check all recipes for omissions. The name and address of the sender should appear on each sheet submitted. All recipes should be received on or before Thursday of next week.

Fresh Fruits and Vegetables Are Best Scurvy Preventatives

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

YES, we still have scurvy. It occurs in some parts of the world all the itme and in all parts of the world some of the time.

Many physicians will say that they they have never seen a case of scurvy in an adult. This is probably not true, as cases have been seen, but were not recognized.

On the other hand, scurvy is not uncommon in infants, despite the fact that the vitamin needed to prevent the disease is now better understood. The opinion formerly held that heating the baby's milk destroyed vitamin C seems to be rather definitely disproved. There are also many factors that enter into the proper absorption of the anti-scorbutic (scurvy preventing) substance.

In some parts of the world the potato is the chief mainstay against scurvy, and should the potato crop fail the disease follows as a matter of course. Ordinarily, there is enough vitamin stored within the body to withstand the loss of fresh fruits and vegetables for several months. This storage factor, however, varies in different individuals.

When an adult develops scurvy the skin becomes sallow and the patient notes that he tires quickly, has less ambition and is breathless. Sharp, darting pains may be felt in the joints and the limbs. After a few days or a few weeks the gums become sore and spongy and sometimes bleed easily. Hemorrhages that vary in size will be observed in the skin.

Prevention lies in the use of fresh fruits and vegetables. Oranges and lemons are the most valuable fruits and vegetables. Oranges and potatoes are the vegetables of choice. Every infant not breast fed should receive each day a definite amount (one tablespoonful at 3 months of age) of orange juice, or double this amount of tomato juice.

If the disease can be detected early the outcome is favorable and the patient will recover without permanent disability. Following the use of antiscorbutic foods, improvement is most striking and the disease itself presents one of those curious circumstances wherein tiny substances can, if absent from the diet, defeat every other known hygienic measure.

Recipe Contest Honors Given Chicken Dish

Sour Beef Tongue and Corn Chowder Awarded Other Prizes.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THERE SHOULD be a dish to please everyone in this group of Post prize-winning recipes this week. Here they are. First prize, $3, is awarded Miss Ann Webb, 211 Fourteenth street, Charlottsville, Va., for her recipe for chicken el capitan. Second prize, $2, goes to Mrs. Bertha Zoeller, 4008 Marlboro Place, for sour beef tongue, and third prize, $1, to Mrs. B. S. Boley, Remington, Va., for corn chowder.

Honorable mention is awarded Miss Edith Clark, 803 Elm street, Chevy Chase, Md., for maple muffins; Mrs. Lindell L. Leathers, 1705 Capitol avenue northeast, for German potato salad; Mrs. James A. Bennett, Leonardtown, Md., for pineapple cream pie, and Miss Josie Kohner, 1629 Columbia road northwest, for calves' brains, sour and sweet.

Chicken el Capitan.

Simmer till golden, six small white onions, four shallots, peeled, and a small clove of garlic in four tablespoons of shortening. These three members of the onion family give a more subtle flavor than a single one, though small white onions will suffice.

When golden, lift them out of the shortening into a glass baking dish or casserole. In the shortening, saute one-fourth pound fowl, cut in pieces as for fricassee. When the fowl is well browned, sprinkle with two tablespoons of flour and shake well. Place in the casserole, add four small carrots cut lengthwise, one shredded green pepper and one shredded red pepper, a tablespoon of minced parsley, one-half teaspoon curry, a pinch of thyme, eight peppercorns, and salt and pepper to taste.

Pour over the chicken one cup of ordinary red wine and one cup of hot water. Top with three medium-sized tomatoes, sliced. Cover and bake in a moderate oven until tender—one and one-half hours. During the last ten minutes of cooking uncover and add one-half cup of raisins and three-fourths cup of blanched almonds. Serves six.

Sour Beef Tongue (Fresh).

Select a fresh tongue, between 2 and 3 pounds, have it closely trimmed, wash thoroughly in warm water. Pickle:

1 cup cider vinegar
1 cup water
1 medium onion, sliced
6 cloves
2 bay leaves
6 peppercorns
1 teaspoon salt
4 ginger snaps

Place tongue in good-sized earthen bowl and pour over the vinegar mixture. Allow the tongue to stand in the pickle for 24 hours (turning tongue occasionally).

Bring vinegar mixture to boiling point in an aluminum saucepan and add tongue. Heat to boiling, then reduce heat and cook gently until tongue is tender, adding ½ cup vinegar and water from time to time is needed. When tongue is almost tender, remove tough skin, finish cooking and serve hot with strained gravy.

Noodles, macaroni or spaghetti are good to serve with the tongue dish. The gravy is improved by the addition of 1 teaspoon capers.

Corn Chowder.

12 ears corn
4 good-sized potatoes
3 onions
1 quart milk
1 cup cream
1 rounding tablespoon butter
Seasonings

Pare and cut potatoes in dice. Peel and slice onions.

Arrange these with the corn in layers in a deep saucepan. Make the last layer corn and pour in pan a pint of water, cover and simmer slowly for half an hour, and then the milk and bring to the boiling point. Rub a tablespoon of butter and two of flour. Whip these into a cup of cream, or rich milk. Stir into boiling chowder, adding salt and pepper to taste. Stir well, but do not break the potatoes.

What Today Means

"Gemini."

IF JUNE 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 11:45 to 1:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 10:45 p. m. to midnight.

Disregarding the rights of others is likely to result in a lot of trouble today, so be careful you are not among those who will be guilty of it. Conditions promotive of delays, especially affecting transportation facilities, are liable to be noticeable on this date, so it is advisable to allow yourself ample time, if you plan going some place.

If a woman and June 1 is your birthday, you may be inclined to take offense too readily for your own piece of mind, as well as your own happiness. Overcome any tendency to anticipate slights. Your friends and relatives are, as a whole loyal and loving. With very little exertion you can make friends. You need to mingle more with people, and should take an interest in church and social affairs.

The child born on June 1, when it arrives at school age, may show an inclination to be rather reserved, and prefer books to companionship. This predilection can be corrected with little trouble.

If a man, and June 1 is your natal day, if you do not let discouragement thwart your plans you should achieve eminent success through possibly law, medicine, literature, manufacturing, salesmanship or art.

Prints Splashed With Plate-Size Figures Are Next on Summer Fashion Scene

The bigger the flowers the better when it comes to printed evening gowns this summer. The huge blossoms spread over the formal costume above are in shades of gray, green and white. This color scheme is not only cool looking but is decidedly novel. Note the unique shoulder and sleeve arrangement.

This Vogue Also Appears in Afternoon Costumes in Paris, Although Smaller Patterned Designs Are Favored.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, May 31.—Prints splashed with the biggest figures Paris has ever used—flowers the size of a large dinner plate—are next on the summer style scene.

Used to fashion slender, low-decollete evening frocks, they stepped out at midseason fashion shows to give the style world something new to talk about.

Black or white crepes printed with huge plate-sized yellow and green sunflowers fashioned slender gowns whose hemlines and trains were encircled by diagonal flounces. Their tops were sometimes without shoulder straps, leaving shoulders and back bare, the decollete often rimmed by a big ruche of the flowers cut from the material and strung with loops of horsehair ribbon. More prints, this time patterned in saucer-sized tulips, fashioned other gowns cut along similar lines.

That same vogue for vivid prints appeared also in afternoon costumes though they favored smaller patterned designs. Some of them combined skirts, blouses and long coats, others frocks and jackets.

A black crepe skirt walked out with a white crepe blouse splashed in small multicolored nosegays and topped by a long coat of the same printed fabric lined in black. A very brilliant flower crepe ensemble printed in tones of red, blue, yellow, green and white, combined a frock with a long sleeveless coat of the same material.

A new crinkled artificial silk crepe in such pale hues as soft light green or creamy beige fashioned a number of striking afternoon frocks with draped necklines and elbow length sleeves shirred up the top of the arm. The clasps on their fabric belts were outstanding. One was a big square wooden buckle covered with silver enamel, the other linked two great gold metal disks with a pair of chains.

White tussor fashioned a number of summer sports suits. One combined a white frock and long coat lined in deep blue to match the belt of the dress, the other a jacket and frock belted in red and green plaid wool ribbon.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH:
I married when quite young My husband was a veteran of the World War. He was not well, yet neither of us hesitated in raising a family. I wanted children. I realized too late I was wrong. Right after our last baby was born he was committed to a hospital. When my baby was two-and-a-half (I was then 28), my husband died. I was left with five darling children all healthy and full of life. I was absolutely alone with the babies. There was no time to sit and weep.

• • • •

I took a course in a business college. Three years passed. Out of a clear sky came the offer to come to Washington, for the position I now hold. I sought out the principal. "By all means accept," he said. He gave me a loan, knowing my circumstances, and I feel I owe him my start. He says he knows I'll succeed and I can't fail him any more than I can my children.

• • • •

I was promoted to second grade for the children. No need to tell you it was quite a problem to budget my pay, with rents so high. We moved into one room, but found we couldn't stay there as all of us were losing our health. My own health was going down and I nearly had a breakdown, but I wouldn't give up.

• • • •

I was promoted to second grade and got more pay. Now I want to go further ahead. I need to study more. Yet I don't want to go to school with a class. We now live in two rooms and are happier than we've been for some time.

• • • •

One of my daughters will enter high school this fall. She has been my right hand. My oldest boy has had his troubles. He is a good boy, but he failed in school. I wish I could have sent him to military school but prices are so high and I have to think of the others. The others are just average in school but are good children. The eldest girl is musically inclined and I would like to give her piano lessons.

• • • •

If I can make another grade, I can get more pay and be of more help to them as they grow older. But I've got to study. I have been told accounting and law is what I need. The thought of going into a classroom frightens me so I'm appealing to you. Is there a way for me to get ahead and study at home? Sincerely and gratefully,

M. E. L.

Miss Backus Will Help.

DEAR M. E. L.: "There was no time to sit and weep." The woman who could act according to that heroic philosophy in a time of crisis such as confronted you four years ago can rest assured she will inevitably attain her goal in life.

• • • •

I'm sure there is a way for you to get ahead by studying at home. Miss Bertie Backus, assistant superintendent in charge of character education of the District's public schools, is the person for you to consult.

• • • •

Call National 6000, ask for Franklin School, and make an appointment for conference with Miss Backus, who has told me she will be glad to help you. I have given her your name. Miss Backus has done an untold amount of constructive work in helping men and women in circumstances similar to yours solve their need for specialized self-education. She has cooperated with this column by providing such help several times in the past.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

More about Eddy Duchin and his singing tournament, which opens, you remember, when Eddy comes to the Earle on June 7. Meanwhile, singers, polish up your Duchin rhythms and send in your letter of application, because Eddy plans to place a Washington man and one woman on the Fire Chief show June 11.

Your letter, sent to Station WRC, should contain your name, age, address, vocal training (if any), experience, and why you think you are qualified to sing Duchin's type of music. This type is rhythmic, so don't apply to sing a ballad. After letters are received, a committee will look them over, select the contestants, and hold several preliminary auditions, the final one June 10, when Duchin and the Fire Chief program manager, Louis A. Witten, will choose the winners.

Local winners receive $100 and the chance of being among the four best for the New York finals. Of these four, two men and two women, the winners will receive $1,000.

Contestants may be amateurs or professionals.

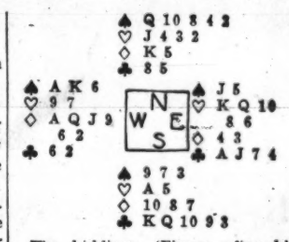
The Meaning of Doubles.

SOMETIMES a player doubles an opposing contract for penalties because he is confident of defeating the contract. At other times the purpose of a penalty double is to direct a lead. A double of a slam bid, for example, is a request to partner to make an unusual lead which, without the double, he would not have considered. A double of a three-notrump contract, when either of the defending players has bid a suit, calls for a lead in that suit. When a three-notrump contract is doubled and neither defender has bid a suit, the inference is that a lead through one of dummy's bid suits is desired.

Such doubles are often sketchy, uncertain things; perhaps the contract can not be defeated even with the best available opening lead. But the gamble is taken that such an opening lead will lead to the contract's being defeated, whereas with any other lead it could be made.

South, Dealer
Both sides vulnerable



The bidding: (Figure after bid refers to numbered explanatory paragraph.)

South	West	North	East
Pass	1◇	Pass	1♡
Pass	2◇	Pass	3♣ (1)
Pass	3NT	Pass	Pass
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—This is a strong bid, since it raises the contract one level higher. It is an invitation to West to bid three notrump if he has the spade suit well under control.

South's double is based upon hope plus careful attention to the bidding. East's club bid was quite informative; it can be assumed that dummy will hold the missing club honors, so that if North opens clubs the lead will be through dummy's tenace. Without a double, North would be most likely to open spades; for since East was not strong enough in spades to bid notrump himself, and South has nothing in that suit, the outstanding strength must be divided between West and North. Fearing that a spade opening may allow West to develop nine tricks before clubs can be established, South sees only one possibility of saving game. He must call North's attention to a club lead and the only way to do so is to double.

After the double North had no difficulty in reading the inference. He opened the eight of clubs, and, by good fortune it was a high enough card to hold the first trick unless dummy covered. If dummy covered, of course, South could continue the suit and establish it while retaining the ace of hearts as an entry-card.

West chose to duck the first club; but South also played low and a continuation by North established the entire suit. Now a diamond finesse lost to the king, and North put South in with the heart ace to run the clubs and set the three-notrump bid two tricks.

The risk that declarer will make his contract and that his gain will be doubled must be taken in such cases. Three notrump doubled and made adds only 100 points to declarer's score. Three notrump doubled and down one saves 600 or 700 points for the defense. If the double succeeds once in four times it shows a comfortable profit.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

House on 64th Street.

New May, May 31.

The Man With the Moving Van is a specialist, who controls a mob of specialists, four in number. I met him during the process of moving from an apartment on East Fourty-first street to an apartment on East Sixty-fourth street, and though our acquaintanceship had only 23 blocks in which to ripen, there is something about the intimacy of a moving van that brings the seed of friendship to a quick boil, if I may mix metaphors. I called him the Man With the Moving Van because the title has a splendid ring to it, a deeper tone to it than to his given name of Rollo. It sounds a bit covered-wagonish, Oregon-trailish, if you know what I mean, but I did not tell this to him because he was the practical type. You could have braided the hair on his brawny chest, and the muscles in his neck stood out like whipcords. He lifted the couch single-handed with one convulsive jerk of his powerful frame, and I complimented him. "I don't ask the boys to do nothing that I wouldn't do myself," he explained. The "boys," four Samsons of subleases, nodded their heads. Here, indeed, was a happy little family of house wreckers.

* * * *

In quick succession, since these five couch-jerker-uppers moved us, body and soul, out of one apartment into another, I have met other interesting people. I have met the Man With the Mosquito Screens, the Man With the Blue Rugs, the Girl With the Rolls of Wallpaper, the Lady in the Antique Shop, the Menace From Venice With the Venetian Blinds, the Lady Decorator, the Man Who Sold Us the Living Room Chairs and the Man Who Maple-Framed the Picture for the Den. Absolutely dissimilar in temperaments, all of these have one thing in common. Wherever you see them, they have folding rulers in their hands. I never realized that there were so many people in this city who had a yen for measuring things. Give them a foot rule and they'll take a yardstick. They bob out of closets, they dangle from the chandeliers, they crawl out from under the radiators, and with lovelight in their eyes, they say: "Six or four"—or whatever the dimension happens to be. It is very difficult to write a column in this atmosphere. I turned around a minute ago, and one of them was measuring the back of my head. What they propose to hang there I don't know, but I don't want portieres. I'm not the type.

* * * *

Being naturally of a jittery and suspicious nature, the new apartment has proved something of a strain to me. It has 26 doors apportioned to seven rooms, and in the stilly night, the wind has a habit of slamming them violently. So now before getting to bed, I take pad and pencil and close each one of them, marking down on the pad that I have closed door 1, door 2, door 3, etc., until they have all been checked off. It sounds silly, of course, but it's either that or getting my little band of Tudor City refugees to huddle together in the living room. Last night it worked out swell, and there were only two violent, nerve-racking slams. It seemed that I became confused by the abundance of doors and closed the refrigerator door twice. That error left two doors swinging on their hinges, and the wind gave them a belt.

* * * *

The apartment is eighteenth century, and I feel quite Marie Antionettish. The only thing lacking is a guillotine to slice the whole wheat bread, but I haven't given up hope, because the decorator is strong on detail. Like all of her profession, she has a whim of iron. She has had me holding things all over the house to get effects, holding a blue vase against a brown wall, holding a brown vase against a blue wall. Standing at 40 paces, she surveys the effect, and I feel much as William Tell's little boy must have felt when his old man was taking a bead on the apple. Not that I am inferring that the young lady decorator looks like William Tell. After all, he was of the thirteenth century, and the apartment is eighteenth century, so there couldn't be any resemblance.

* * * *

After the first week, incautiously you invite your friends to look at what the gods have wrought. "Of course," you tell them, as they step furtively into the foyer, "all of the furniture has not arrived. That gap or void in the dining room is where a table will stand, and here, on this wall, we plan to have a mirror." Your friends try to look understanding, but only appear bewildered as though sections of a crossword puzzle had been lost in the shuffle. They promise that they will return in a week, when all the pieces will have arrived, but on the way out you can hear them muttering, and you sense what they're saying.

* * * *

Some of them, however, enter into the informal spirit of the thing: "I think," they say with a fierce Christopher Columbus glare in their eyes, "that the couch would look better here, don't you?" When you hear this, never mistake it to be a question, for it is a statement of fact. With this type, do not argue. Simply pick up the couch and move it. As they warm to their task, they will suggest the different placing of chairs, desks, bric-a-brac, and may even call in the superintendent to cement the fireplace and dig another one more to the west. However, it's all good, clean fun, and you learn things, too. I always thought a hurricane was a tropical storm, and now I learn it's an old-fashioned candle-lamp. Probably I'll learn an earthquake is the Twentieth Century mailman, who'll bring the Eighteenth Century bills.

In his capacity as assistant clerk of the court, Mr. Hull is head of the equity branch of the clerk's office. His duties frequently call for him to issue marriage licenses, but when it came time for him to get his own, his associates said, he was "so scared" he asked one of them to get it for him.

Maryland Studies Highway Economy; Drops 5 Employes

Washington County Cut in Staff to Save $6,000 a Year.

Slash May Extend To Other Sections

Chief Engineer Says General Force May Be Affected.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 31.—The dismissal of five employes of the State roads commission represents an effort at economy which may be extended to other counties and to the general staff of the commission, Chief Engineer Nathan L. Smith said today.

Dismissal of the Washington County employes was not made known until today. The saving amounts to approximately $6,000 annually.

Smith said studies would be made in other counties and that where similar economies could be accomplished, like reductions in forces would be made.

He said there would be no violation of the merit system. Persons under the merit system who are dismissed would be placed on the eligible list for reemployment when there was work for them.

Those dismissed in Washington County are Norman R. McCardell, superintendent of county roads; Harry S. Leasure, assistant to McCardell; Floyd Strine, assistant to Robert E. L. Putnam, superintendent of State roads in the county; Garland Stull, chief clerk, and Miss Glass, a stenographer.

The dismissals are effective today.

In commenting on the dismissal of five road maintenance officials in Washington County an official of the State highway commission stated that it had been found that the cost of the maintenance of roads was too heavy.

Two of the positions made vacant will not be filled, according to this official, who added that the saving in Washington County would be about $4,000 yearly, which will be applied to road building instead. This policy will be followed throughout the State, it was stated, and where the commission can abolish higher salaried positions in the maintenance department no new jobs will be created.

In some of the counties, it was stated the debt service, cost of road upkeep, and salaries exceeded the amount alloted, leaving nothing for road building. The commission will abolish the debt service and intends to save as much as possible by abolishing maintenance positions wherever possible.

Every county presents a different problem, it was stated, and the commission will deal with each separately in abolishing higher salaried maintenance positions.

Naval Aviators Ducked As Plane Falls in Bay

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Norfolk, Va., May 31 (AP).—A Navy plane that banked too low cracked up in Little Bay today, but a fisherman pulled Pilot D. N. Hawks and W. S. Hassell, his observer, from the water, uninjured. A wrecking barge was sent to the scene to grapple for the plane that sank almost immediately.

Hawks was landing the plane after the early morning "weather hop." His vision was obscured by mist and he was skimming the surface of the bay when he attempted to bank. A wing plowed into the water, the plane nosed over and the two men, soaked in the gasoline that escaped from burst tanks, were catapulted into the water. Their rescuers's name was not learned.

Arnold Death Jury Excused Until Today

Panel Unable to Reach Verdict in Murder of Deputy Sheriff.

Former State Highway Patrolman Charged With Crime.

By the Associated Press.

Jonesville, Va., May 31.—Unable to reach a verdict after 55 minutes of deliberation, a Lee County circuit court jury today was excused until tomorrow in the case of J. S. Mise, charged with the murder of Deputy Sheriff Fred Arnold.

Circuit Judge E. T. Carter ordered the jury to be on hand at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow to resume deliberations.

The case went to the jury late today after occupying the attention of the court since Monday. Mise, a former State highway patrolman, is charged with killing Arnold when he went to Arnold's home last Christmas with his son, Clayburn Mise, Miss Grace Ely and her brother Carl.

Arguments over instructions and arguments of attorneys before the jury required the time of the court today and the case did not reach the jury until shortly before 5 p. m.

Appearing as a defense witness yesterday, Clayburn Mise testified he shot Arnold as he and the deputy struggled with pistols in their hands. Young Mise said he went to his father's assistance when Arnold struck J. S. Mise.

Clayburn Mise exhibited a wound he said he received in an exchange of shots with Arnold.

Miss Ely and her brother corroborated the testimony of the Mises, except Carl Ely said he was outside the house when the shots were fired.

Virginia Democrats Cool to Coalition

Byrd and Glass Stanch in Resisting Move.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 31.—Suggestions that "right wing" Democrats and Republicans meet informally, probably at Richmond, "to consider some form of political action that is for country above party" found no support today from Democratic leaders in the Old Dominion.

Senator Harry F. Byrd said he would attend no such meeting if he were invited and Senator Carter Glass resisted efforts to enlist him in any coalition movement.

Commenting on the story published by the New York Herald-Tribune, quoting Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State, as saying several Democratic leaders had been invited to an informal conference to discuss a coalition, Democratic Chairman J. Murray Hooker said he believed such a meeting could do "no possible good."

The two men were en route to Brunswick. The train had been standing and began to move over the crossing as the automobile approached. The machine and its occupants were dragged about 200 feet. The crew of the train extricated Burgee and Albert from the wreckage.

Pearson Probe At Maryland U. To Be Extended

Inquiry Into 'All Activity' of School Due on Basis of Questionnaire.

A "further investigation of all phases of University of Maryland activities" was announced last night by the board of regents after an examination of answers to questionnaires sent to faculty members.

The announcement was made by Dr. W. W. Skinner, secretary of the board, at the close of an all-day session at College Park on the eve of the school's commencement exercises.

It was understood, though official news sources were silent, that the board would convene again at 9 a. m. today for a further study of the questionnaires which asked deans and department heads for opinions on the proficiency of Dr. Raymond A. Pearson as president of the school.

To Speed Probe.

The official statement from the board read:

"The board of regents of the University of Maryland assembled at College Park today to review the questionnaire sent recently to the deans and members of the faculty as a preliminary part of the investigation which the board is conducting."

"The result of the answers justify a further investigation of all phases of the university's activities and such will be concluded as soon as possible."

"To contradict recently published utterances in connection with Dr. Pearson's administration, the board of regents announces that the reduction in funds available to the university for salaries and other expenses is a responsibility of the board as well as others connected with the university and not only that of Dr. Pearson."

700 to Graduate.

"Few resignations from the faculty have taken place in recent years. The board feels there has been no lowering of the standards of the university by these resignations."

George M. Shriver, chairman of the board, refused to make any personal comments on the situation or to reveal the attitude of the board toward the charges of inefficiency, hurled at Dr. Pearson by students and faculty.

If it reconvenes, the board is expected to be in session until 11 a. m., when the annual commencement exercises will be held at Ritchie Coliseum. Approximately 700 students will receive diplomas.

According to the custom of years past, Harry W. Nice, as Governor of the State of Maryland, will deliver the address to the graduates.

Davis to Go on Trial In Murder of His Kin

Independence, Va., May 31 (AP).—Trial of W. F. Davis, charged with the murder of his half-uncle, James Blevins, is set to start Monday. Blevins was shot March 4 on the public road leading down Cabin Creek in the Whitetop section and died a few days later in an Abingdon Hospital.

Davis and Blevins were neighbors. Both had families and were considered good citizens, the slain man having been a lay preacher and superintendent of Sunday school in the local Lutheran Church.

Funds Running Short For Law Enforcement

Richmond, May 31 (AP).—Despite repeal of the State prohibition law with resultant decreases in enforcement expenses, Virginia's criminal cost accounts face a deficit of approximately $90,000, Budget Director J. H. Bradford announced today.

Savings in enforcement costs had been wiped out in large measure, he said, by the law placing Commonwealth's attorneys on a salary basis. He estimated criminal costs would be some $90,000 in excess of the $969,000 now available.

Health Chief Cites Jumps In Auto Toll

Dr. R. H. Riley Points to Fall in Death Rate From Diseases.

Has Been With Maryland Department for Two Decades.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 31.—The rising death rate due to automobile accidents was the one lament today of Dr. Robert H. Riley, director of the State health department, as he reached his twentieth anniversary as a Maryland public health officer.

During the two decades, he said he has seen the general death rate and the rates of communicable diseases steadily decline, while the automobile toll has increased from year to year.

"It almost seems that public health workers are saving the lives of persons in so far as disease is concerned, only to see them crushed to death in traffic mishaps," the health chief observed.

Toll in 1934 a Record.

Since he became a part-time district health officer on June 1, 1915, in Allegany and Garrett Counties, with headquarters in Cumberland, Dr. Riley has seen the automobile death rate grow from 4.4 per 100,000 of population to 28.4, the record in 1934. The automobile today is more deadly in Maryland than typhoid fever, diphtheria, diarrhea and enteritis combined, and each of them was a dread disease 20 years ago.

In 1915 the typhoid death rate was 23.2 per 100,000 of population. Last year it was 2.4. Diphtheria has been reduced from a disease which claimed 13.3 per 100,000 then to one which claimed a toll of but 1.3 in 1934. Diarrhea and enteritis formerly had a death rate of 98.7, which in the last report had declined to 21.4 per 100,000, Dr. Riley said.

He has seen the infant mortality rate reduced from 119.3 per 1,000 live births in 1915 to 68.9 last year, and even the "black plague" of tuberculosis has been cut from 187.6 to 78.1 deaths per 100,000 of population.

General Death Rate Down.

"When I began my public health work the State health department was a trouble-shooting organization," Dr. Riley said. "It went into action after an epidemic broke out. There were only 10 deputy health officers for the entire State, none on full time.

"Now there is a full time health officer in every county. The improvements they have brought about or assisted in accomplishing have caused the death rate to decline steadily.

"Among the more important improvements have been safer water supplies, sanitization of the milk and food supplies, extensive sewage systems in cities and towns, determining sources of infectious diseases, diagnosis of diseases, preventive measures such as inoculations and an extensive educational program reaching the general public."

With this program in effect, he added, the general death rate has declined from 15.5 per 1,000 of population to 12.2 as registered last year.

Trolleys Replaced In Charlottesville

Bus Service Inaugurated by Street Railway Line.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., May 31. Charlottesville's 52-year-old street car line went out of existence last night. The electric cars which have run to the university and over the suburban line to Fry's Spring were replaced by buses today.

Officials of the Virginia Public Service Co., parent organization of the Charlottesville and Albemarle Railway, said the railway company would continue in existence, however, as operator of the buses.

When each bus pulled out on its run there was a motorman from the old street car system and an instructor on it. The instructors will continue with the men in their new jobs until they have learned the methods of a newer system of transportation.

The buses will operate for the present on the street car schedule. The C. & A. has been negotiating with the Virginia State Lines to take over the service.

Pomona Grange to Meet At Feagaville Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., May 31.—The quarterly meeting of Pomona Grange, embracing subordinate units at Jefferson, Ballenger, Lewistown, Braddock, Middletown, Mount Pleasant, New Market, Myersville and Creagerstown will be held at Feagaville tomorrow. A business session, presided over by F. Holter, Middletown, will be held in the morning, and the afternoon will be occupied with an address by Sherman P. Bowers, State's attorney, a music and literary program and a playlet staged by members of the Ballenger organization.

A luncheon will be served at noon by women of the Ballenger Grange. In addition to routine business, preliminary plans will be discussed for the annual farm bureau-grange picnic and a change of exhibit at the county fair.

Voluntary Snake Bite Swells Pastor's Arm, But Faith's Firm

Virginia Preacher Insists He'll Be Cured by Prayer, Not Doctors.

By the Associated Press.

St. Charles, Va., May 31.—His arm discolored and swollen almost double from the bite of a copperhead snake which he permitted in a demonstration of the "power of faith," the Rev. George Hensley, Holiness preacher, tonight refused medical aid and said he would preach another sermon.

"I am not interested in help from doctors," he said. "I will get well in four days with the help of the Lord."

The first bite from the venomous reptile, which the preacher pulled from a covered bucket at a revival last night, was apparently ineffective, but there was a swelling from a second bite on his thumb. He refused to do anything except pray and was ill last night and today.

Interviewed late today at a one-room mountain cabin about 3 miles from St. Charles, where he is living with his wife and two small daughters, the 53-year-old evangelist said he had remained in bed all day but expected to attend another service tonight.

He said he had been in the ministry 23 years and had been bitten by many reptiles under similar circumstances.

"The Lord always healed the bites," he said.

Describing other events which he called "miracles of faith," he said he had once lost a finger and that it was healed in one day. The Lord, he said, cured him of tuberculosis when he entered the ministry, and on another occasion he was healed of injuries received from falling slate in a mine.

Medical aid was offered by citizens here but the minister gave all the answer that he "didn't need a doctor."

The copperhead was captured in the mountains here by Ted Harriss and Allen Jones. The minister has been in this vicinity for about two months.

Retail Grocers Call Meeting To Uphold NRA

Wish to Maintain Present Standards Is Voiced in Maryland.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 31.—The more than 1,200 members of the Independent Retail Grocers' Association of Maryland have been called to attend a mass meeting here next Wednesday to voice "vigorous support" to the whole NRA structure of wages, hours and prices.

Harry Walker, executive secretary of the association, announced the meeting. The association's board of directors already is on record as favoring continuation of present NRA standards despite the Supreme Court decision outlawing the NRA as unconstitutional.

Resolutions to that end are to be submitted to the entire membership at the Wednesday meeting.

"We are out to maintain present standards," Walker explained.

"We've always been 100 per cent in favor of the NRA. It was only the lax enforcement that we kicked about. We want to maintain the present wages and hours and the 6 per cent mark-up.

"The national convention is to be held at Indianapolis June 15 and the whole thing will be taken up there."

Asked if the grocers would be requested to continue NRA observance for any special period or merely idefinitely on a voluntary basis, Walker replied:

"Well, we expect some bridge to be thrown across the chasm."

The association secretary said there have been no marked instances of price slashing, introduction of the banned "loss-leaders" or wage cuts or lengthening of hours among the Baltimore grocers.

Academy Opens Its June Week Program Today

Baltimore Girl Selected to Present Winning Company Colors.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, May 31.—With the "color girl" selected for June Week festivities, and the Army lacrosse squad ready for its traditional clash with Navy, the stage was set at the Naval Academy tonight for the opening of the eighty-ninth commencement exercises that will end Thursday when about 440 midshipmen will be graduated.

Miss Hilda Hazard, of Baltimore, was chosen today by Midshipman Walter A. Moore, jr., of Port Arthur, Tex., to present the national and academy colors to his company, which won the regimental flag competition.

The Army lacrosse squad of 25 players arrived at the academy during the afternoon. A victory would give them the strongest claim to the intercollegiate championship. The undefeated West Pointers recently defeated St. John's College, victors over the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins University.

9:30 a. m.—Rehearsal of presentation of the colors.

Noon—Graduates' luncheon, Officers' Club.

Godar Death Investigation Clears Wife

Justifiable Homicide Is Finding of Hagerstown Coroner's Jury.

Verdict Freeing Church Worker Is Returned in 2 Minutes.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., May 31.—Mrs. Annabelle Godar, 38, preparatory school secretary and church worker, was free today after a verdict by a coroner's jury, which held that the fatal shooting of her husband, Austin C. Godar, 44, laundry executive, last Saturday night was justifiable homicide. Mrs. Godar admitted in two statements to police that she shot her husband in self-defense.

Still unable to take the stand at today's hearing, Mrs. Godar listened to her statements read at the inquest and two minutes after the jury had retired saw them file back and exonerate her of blame.

The quick verdict came after Co-investigator Clarence Baker had read Mrs. Godar's statements in which she was quoted as saying she was not sorry she did it; that her husband drove her to it and that she could not hold out any longer.

But Baker admitted that after the statement "she was not sorry" she had expressed the hope that he would not die.

It was when Godar snatched a Bible she was reading from her hands and hurled it at her head, she said she fired at him with a pistol she had beneath her pillow. He had told her as he approached that he "would break every bone in her body," her statement said. Two employes of his laundry testified that Godar did not appear intoxicated when he left the laundry for his home. Mrs. Godar in her statement said her husband was intoxicated.

While today's verdict was expected to end the case, it does not prevent the grand jury from making an investigation if it so desires.

Two Excellent New Film Plays Beat the Barrier and Bow in on Memorial Day

Miss Hepburn's New Vehicle Is Musical Drama

Boyer Almost Steals Show; Gay Musical at Earle; Amusement News.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"BREAK OF HEARTS." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by Lester Cohen, adapted to the screen by Sarah Y. Mason, Victor Heerman and Anthony Veiller, starring Katharine Hepburn and featuring Charles Boyer, with John Beal, Jean Hersholt, Sam Hardy, Inez Courtney, Helene Millard, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Susan Fleming, Lee Kohlmar, Jean Howard, and Anne Grey. Directed by Philip Moeller. Reviewed Thursday afternoon.

It is an aged and hoary formula that Lester Cohen, author, has invoked here to signalize the return of Katharine Hepburn from unmistakably dated period drama to modern romance.

Author Cohen, however, has imparted a slightly new flavor to the fable of the young composer who loves and marries a celebrated symphony orchestra conductor, loses that love and him through jealousy, and returns to her wifely place in his life just in time to salvage him from the dingy back rooms of the neighborhood groggeries, where he is rapidly drinking himself out of fame and fortune.

This rejuvenation of an outworn theme has been accomplished by bringing to the picture a backstage glimpse of a great symphony orchestra and punctuating the action with the music of the masters, well played by an ensemble of some 85 musicians assembled by Max Steiner, musical director for RKO-Radio.

The orchestra, instead of providing merely an atmospheric background for a detached romantic narrative, is a vital factor in the working out of Mr. Cohen's story and contributes not only melody, but comedy and an occasional touch of human interest to a dramatic fabric with which it is inseparably interwoven.

Great Works Are Played.

There is never too much of the orchestra for the picture's best dramatic effect, but it is, nevertheless, possible, from time to time, to recognize snatches of Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony," the Toccato and fugue by Bach, and snatches of Wagner's "Parsifal" while the orchestra either is in rehearsal or ostensibly presenting a concert to a packed house.

It is as conductor of the orchestra that Charles Boyer is cast. He is the great, the adored, the petted Franz Roberti, idol of two continents and incessantly sought by lonely women. He meets an obscure and struggling composer, Constance, and between them there immediately springs up the bond of common interests and a deep infatuation each for the other.

Although Roberti has expounded the specious philosophy of the confirmed philanderer, Constance consents to marry him. Then come the inevitable deceptions as Didi, Phyllis, Sylvia and all the rest of the old loves persist in their pursuit of the maestro, Reno divorce and a turning of the tables when Constance leads the irresponsible sort of life of which her husband has prattled so volubly. And then the complete disintegration of Roberti, beginning with his appearance at a concert so drunk that he collapsed on the conductor's podium.

Reclaimed by Melody.

It takes the melody his wife had composed in their courting days, played on a rickety piano in the back room of a side-street saloon, to snap the great Roberti out of it. At the final fade-out he has just scored another triumph as the most magnetic conductor of his day.

There are moments during the development of the story when one wonders which is the star, Miss Hepburn or Mr. Boyer. As he demonstrated in "Caravan" and more recently in "Private Worlds," this Boyer chap is the possessor of a personality that projects itself from the screen with remarkable vigor. This also, of course, is true of Miss Hepburn. It is a nip-and tuck race for first honors, the final decision resting wholly upon the variable item of personal preference.

No very tremendous demands are made in this subject upon Katharine Hepburn's interpretative talents. Many of her emotional scenes are photographed in close-up, probably so that the tears will show. It is in the lighter intervals of the play that she scores most effectively—particularly in the scenes with John Beal, who reveals a penchant for comedy that was not even hinted by his performance opposite Miss Hepburn in the title role of "The Little Minister." Mr. Beal turns in a facile and thoroughly delightful portrayal as Johnny, the man about town, who also loved Constance, but lost to her sense of wifely duty.

An Excellent Fishing Reel.

Other important contributions to a well-balanced acting ensemble are made by Jean Hersholt, as Roberti's instructor and mentor; Sam Hardy in a brief bit as a publisher of popular music; Helene Millard, Susan Fleming, Lee Kohlmar, as an amusing member of the orchestra, Schubert by name; Jean Howard and Anne Grey.

An extraordinary reel of deep-sea fishing, "Fish From Hell"—a part of which, one suspects, was filmed in an aquarium—offers several reels of unalloyed excitement in the landing of everything piscatorial from a sea bass to a whale.

The Pathe News and Walt Disney's Silly Symphony, "The Tortoise and the Hare," are the other supplementaries of a feature that adds nothing to Miss Hepburn's dramatic stature, but nevertheless proves her a thoroughgoing actress and an able comedienne.

As predicted, her gowns will arouse the envy of feminine spectators and completely baffle the men!

Two Stars Who Continue to Charm

Earle

"IN CALIENTE." First National picturization of a story by Ralph Block and Warren Duff, adapted to the screen by Jerry Wald and Julius Epstein, featuring Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton, and Leo Carillo, with Winifred Shaw, Glenda Farrell, Herman Bing, Phil Regan, John Hyams, and Harry Holman. Music and lyrics by Mort Dixon and Allie Wrubel. Directed by Lloyd Bacon; musical numbers by Busby Berkeley. Previewed Tuesday afternoon.

As has been stated here before—no longer ago than Wednesday morning, as a matter of fact—here is a swift-moving, tuneful and vivacious light musical comedy-romance, handsomely staged, picturesquely costumed and exceedingly well acted, sung and danced.

The story is frankly farcical, but, with that quality once granted, of sufficient substance to stand on its own feet without the necessity of musical bolstering. The musical numbers, however, are distinct assets. They are sung by a strolling quartet of street troubadours—this would be "In Caliente"—Winifred Shaw, who makes a considerable spectacle of "The Lady in Red," to which the De Marcos also execute one of their incomparable dances, and Phil Regan, who carols his roundelays from a variety of vantage points, including the back of a pure white charger.

The action revolves around the predicament in which a New York magazine publisher finds himself after his best friend has spirited him away in a drunken stupor to Agua Caliente, Mexico. The idea is partly one of sobering the lad up and partly one of rescuing him from the matrimonial clutches of a dizzy blonde who already has brought three or four breach of promise suits within the year. Both schemes work.

Expansive Chorus Effects.

The editor manages to shake off the ravages of strong drink, falls in love with a dancer, whom he has previously panned in his magazine, and has an expensive time of it paying off her manager at every turn. All very amusing and very gay. Busby Berkeley has kept his enormous musical numbers well on the side of sanity and maneuvers a huge chorus skillfully and with expansive effect.

Dolores Del Rio is the Spanish dancer, pursued by Pat O'Brien, and Edward Everett Horton is the "best friend" who, like his charge, pays off continually to Leo Carillo, Miss Del Rio's manager. Glenda Farrell is the deadly blonde, who finally winds up by marrying Mr. Horton while the original object of her affections, Mr. O'Brien, marries Miss Del Rio. Here, certainly, the framework of pure farce becomes clearly evident.

It is all very well done. The lines are witty and the tunes melodious. The Agua Caliente Casino affords precisely the right background for this frivolous sort of thing.

Stage Bill Only So-So.

On the stage, the Earle offers a bill that is notable chiefly for the superlative tap dancing of Paul Draper, late of Eddie Dowling's "Thumbs Up" company. Mr. Draper, it may be said, is in a class by himself when it comes to broken rhythms and unique tempos. His tango tap dance is one of the most intricate and most fascinating creations that have come along in a year of blue moons.

The bill is opened by Elaine Dowling and four young feminine acrobatic dancers who do some rather remarkable feats of gymnasticism—especially a diminutive youngster by the name of Phyllis Dare. Jean Boydell, in grotesque songs and dances, to these eyes and ears fell something short of being an "unique pepologist," as the trig Miss Audrey Sieber introduced her.

The presumable headliners of the bill are the Landt Trio and White, three microphone vocalists and a pianist, who offered the usual routine of ballads, topical songs and comedy. This type of act, borrowed from the airways, has slightly outlived its welcome, but the boys were roundly applauded by the holiday audience yesterday afternoon, even so.

The Universal News, with Graham McNamee, and Freddy Clark's orchestral contributions, complete a bill on which the screen feature far surpasses the stage offerings, save for Mr. Draper's expert hoofing.

Belasco

"THE UNFINISHED SYMPHONY." Gaumont-British picturization of a romantic story of the life of Franz Schubert, with dialogue by Benn Levy and an appropriate musical score of Schubert compositions, featuring Helen Chandler, Martha Eggerth, and Hans Jaray, with Ronald Squire, Hermine Sterler, Esme Percy, Frieda Richard, Beryl Laverick, and others. Directed by Willy Forst; musical adaptation by Willy Schmidt-Gentner, introducing the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, the Wiener Saengerknaben, the chorus of the State Opera, Vienna, and the Gypsy Band Gyula Howarth.

Demonstrating the capacity of Gaumont British for making musicalized screen romances that will compare favorably with anything Hollywood has turned out in this particular field of production, "The Unfinished Symphony," now in its second week at the Belasco, richly deserves the extension of its engagement on Lafayette Square.

Here is the young manhood of Franz Schubert, the great composer, translated into terms of human triumphs, disappointments and minor tragedies with a fine eye for artistry, enough thought to plausibility to make it seem real and a degree of musical perception that is unusual.

The musical background of the action is, of course, composed of the most famous and most beloved of Schubert's melodies, the fictional story of the composer's romance hinging upon a possible, but not probable, reason for his never having completed his B Minor Symphony beyond its first movements.

An Expert Cast.

The role of Schubert is ingenuously but effectively played by Hans Jaray, with Marta Eggerth, Hungarian soprano, in the opposite role of the young countess who all but ruins Schubert's life. Helen Chandler and a long list of others add expert impersonations to an ensemble that attains imposing proportions in some of the play's pivotal scenes.

The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, a grand opera chorus and the Wiener Saengerknaben add to the musical distinction of "The Unfinished Symphony," which, incidentally, is unequivocally recommended to all who appreciate earnest and conscientious productional effort combined with real entertainment.

Laugh, Clown, Laugh Note.

Probably the greatest surprise in Katharine Hepburn's "Break of Hearts" is that John Beal should betray so keen a sense of comedy.

He turns out to be one of the Beals of laughter you have heard so much about, as you might say.

Paluck, Kelly Suspended, Five Horses Barred.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, May 31.—A trainer and a stableman were suspended today by the Maryland State Racing Commission on charges of stimulation of horses. Five horses were barred.

Jervis Spencer, chairman of the commission, said:

"For stimulation of Wild Blonde in the second race at Hagerstown on May 24, Pat Paluck, trainer, and Bernard Kelly, head stableman, have been ruled off all courses under the jurisdiction of the racing commission up to and including August 31, 1935. The entries of Wild Blonde, Glee Maiden, Bendromel, Boolitte and King Holis, horses in Pat Paluck's charge, will be refused for the same period.

"The reason for the lightness of the penalty is because it is the first offense."

Once in command PRECIOUS KING easily drew away from his field. AELLA set a fast early pace, but wasn't good enough. TELL IT ran an even race. BRIZETTE stumbled and fell at first turn unseating her rider.

Trojans Star In I. C. 4-A Qualifying

Put Full Team in Finals; Pittsburgh Surprises With Six Places.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 31.—Forecasting a decisive conquest for Southern California's Trojans, who came through the qualifying tests without the loss of a single contestant, the preliminary battle for places in the fifty-ninth intercollegiate A. A. A. A. track and field championships today was lifted from its otherwise monotonous routine by the sensational sprint of Columbia's Ben Johnson, Negro sophomore.

Johnson, who holds the national as well as the I. C. A. A. A. A. indoor sprint crowns, served notice of his challenge to the new California comet, George Anderson, by beating the meet records in the trials for both the 100 and 200 meter dashes.

Share New Record.

These two sprinters shared a new mark of 10.5 for the century, clipping one-tenth second off the old record, as they paced the semi-finalists. Johnson then reeled off the 200 in 21 seconds flat, also one-tenth second under the former record, but this was disallowed because of a 7-mile-an-hour following breeze. Anderson was clocked in 21.7 as he also qualified handily for the longer sprint and forecast a brilliant duel tomorrow in the finals, for the speed crowns.

The fitful winds which swirled through the Harvard Stadium most of the afternoon, finally bringing a shower of rain at the finish, deprived Phil Cope, Southern California, of a new meet mark in the 110-meter high hurdles. Cope was clocked in 14.6 seconds in the semi-finals, a tenth under the former record, but a 5-mile-an-hour wind was sufficient to rule the performance off the books.

Equals Meet Mark.

Meanwhile, Phil Good, of Bowdoin, the defending champion in the nigh hurdles, qualified the hard way by coming through in his third test to equal the meet record of 14.7 seconds, without being aided by the wind. Good had won the first race in the same time, only to have it disallowed because of the wind. He then had the misfortune to trip in the semifinals, trailing Cope, as well as Tom Moore, of California. He was forced to run an extra heat, but came through handsomely in one of the day's outstanding performances.

Southern California turned in an amazingly consistent team performance. The Trojans sent 16 men into the trials, conducted in 11 of the 15 championship events. Every one of them survived, including Ray Cartwright, who came through gallantly to qualify in the 800-meter run after losing a shoe in the early stages of his heat. Otherwise, U. S. C. completely dominated the team proceedings and will have its entire squad of 20 athletes intact when the decisive competition begins tomorrow afternoon.

Men in Eight Events.

The Trojans placed men in eight events today. Their qualifiers included three each in the 200-meter low hurdles and the broad jump, two each in the 110-meter high hurdles, 200, 400 and 800 meter runs, and one each in the 100-meter dash and discus. They doubled the qualifying total of their nearest rival, the University of California, which gained eight places and forecast a one-two finish for the Far Western contingent, with Stanford also figuring to make a good showing with its four-man squad.

Pittsburgh sprang a welcome surprise for the Eastern contingent by gaining six qualifying places and finishing third on today's list. The Panthers picked up two places each in the 100 meters and javelin throw, one each in the 400 and 800 meter runs. Tied at fourth, with five qualifying places each, were Stanford, Cornell and Harvard, the latter two bearing the main hopes of the East, along with Columbia and Pitt, in tomorrow's finals. Columbia picked up three qualifying places, as did Manhattan, Bates and Pennsylvania.

Little to Cheer About.

Competitors from the Pacific Coast registered the best performances in six of today's 11 events and tied for the best in a seventh, thus leaving the Eastern delegation with comparatively little to cheer about. Johnson's sprinting, the low hurdling of Hamilton Hucker, of Cornell, who topped the qualifiers in 23.7 seconds and the 800-meter trial of Columbia's Bill Patterson, in 1:54.8, were outstanding for the East. Gene Venzke, of Pennsylvania, qualifying easily in the 800, will make his bid for a "double"

Giants Trounce Braves Twice, 15-3, 4-2

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, May 31.—The fast-stepping New York Giants stretched their winning streak to seven games and their National League lead to 5½ games today by trimming the cellar-dwelling Braves in both ends of a double-header, 15 to 3 and 4 to 2.

It was the second of three straight bargain bills for both teams, and the Giants in particular, showed signs of weariness after they had slammed out 22 assorted hits in the first game for their biggest total of the season. The second game wound up in a heavy rain that apparently cost Carl Hubbell a shut-out. Four of the Braves' 12 hits and both their runs were made in that inning.

Every man in the New York line-up made at least one hit in the opening encounter. Manager Bill Terry hammered a home run inside the park and two singles.

Nats and A's In Twin Bill Today

By Shirley L. Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—Caught in the throes of their worst slump of the season, and facing a pitching crisis, the Nats are looking toward tomorrow's double-header with the Athletics for a turn in their fortunes.

In his hour of need for pitchers, Manager Bucky Harris tonight announced that he had promoted Jack Russell to a starting role, despite the tall right-hander's recent failures as a relief pitcher. Karl Whitehill will oppose the Athletics in the opening engagement tomorrow.

Remembering the success of young Varnon Wilshire against the Nats in Philadelphia last month when he pitched the A's to a shut-out victory over the Nats, surrendering only two hits and boasting a no-hit game until the eighth inning, Manager Connie Mack will start the rookie southpaw in one of the two games. John Marcum, hefty right-hander, is scheduled to pitch the other.

Four Losses in Row.

Whipped by the Yankees in three straight games after losing the final game of the series with Cleveland, the Nats now own their longest losing streak of the season—four straight—but they regard the Athletics as second only to the St. Louis Browns as their favorite prey.

In five games with the Philadelphia Club this season, the Nats have won four.

Manager Harris tonight announced that Lyn Larry would return to his regular short stop role after a siege of illness during which Ossie Bluege performed capably both in the field and at bat, but Lary still is Harris' choice for the position. The Nats' manager points out that Larry's anemic batting average of .217 is not indicative of the manner in which he has been hitting the ball.

Harris is not unduly concerned by Heinie Manush's batting slump during the last 10 games which have seen his average shrink from a respectable .300 mark to .276. The big fellow has a penchant for evening matters up with his bat and, in the light of past performances, is due for a sustained batting streak.

Bemoaning the loss of Buck Newsom at a time when it appeared that he would pitch the club into a contending position, Harris nevertheless was not pessimistic as he surveyed the league standing.

"How can anybody count us out?"

Indians Down Chisox, 6-2, In Final

Brown and Harder Give Only Six Hits; Aided by Foe's Errors.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, May 31.—The combined pitching efforts of Clint Brown and Mel Harder and a lot of loose play on the part of the White Sox combined to shove the Chicagoans deeper into second place in the American League today as the Cleveland Indians won the series final, 6 to 2.

The defeat left the Sox a game and a half behind the New York Yankees, who assumed the leadership yesterday, while Cleveland trailed one game further back.

Brown and Harder reversed their usual roles. Brown started the game against young Vernon Kennedy, who also has been used in relief roles, and when he weakened in the eighth, Harder stepped in to finish the game. Between them they allowed only six hits.

Makes Three Errors.

Marty Hopkins, substituting for the injured Jack Hayes at second base, made three errors, all of which contributed to the Cleveland scoring and helped to upset Kennedy. The pitcher did a fairly good job in the face of difficulties, giving nine hits but passing five.

Technically the first four Indian runs were unearned. Two came in the first inning when Hopkins Muffed Joe Vosmik's grounder after Billy Knickerbocker had singled. The former scored when Vosmik was forced at second by Earl Averill, who came home on singles by Hal Trosky and Bruce Campbell.

French Foe Routed By Helen Jacobs

By the Associated Press.

Paris, May 31.—Helen Jacobs today drew a step nearer the French hard court tennis championship, a major title she never has won, as play moved quietly into the semi-final round in both men's and women's singles.

The American champion's decisive conquest of Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, featured a day of mediocre tennis in which favorites, almost without exception, advanced in straight sets.

Miss Jacobs, in fine form and never threatened, blasted Mme. Henrotin out of the tournament, 6—4, 6—2, in a match that was too one-sided to be interesting.

Exhibit Is Victor At Belmont Track

By the Associated Press.

Belmont Park, May 31.—Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin's three-year-old colt, Exhibit, was an easy winner of the featured Linden Handicap, a one-mile test for Class "C" performers, here this afternoon. Well handled by Sammy Renick, the 16-to-5 second choice went to the front entering the stretch and drew off to register by three lengths.

Thorson, representing B. M. Byers, closed resolutely to deprive the tired G. P. Odom color bearer, Chancing, of the place by a length. The racing strip was drying out since rain stopped falling this morning and horses were running virtually as fast as if the track had been at its best. Exhibit completed the eight furlongs in 1:38 flat.

Johnson Shakes Hand That Shook His Throne

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Double by Goslin Wins for Detroit

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 31.—Goose Goslin came back from the Detroit Tigers' bench, to which he was exiled for weak hitting, to lead the Tigers to a 6-5 victory today over the St. Louis Browns.

Knott was relief pitching for St. Louis when Manager Mickey Cochrane called on Goslin to bat for Clifton in the ninth. Goslin slammed out a double that cleared the bases and a minute later he came home with the winning run when Cochrane doubled.

Klick Spends Day Seeing Sights

CHAPERONED by Bob Smith and Frank Huber, Shrine officials, Ray Carlen, his manager, and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, Frankie Klick, the San Francisco slugger who is supplying half the entertainment a week from Monday at Griffith Stadium, yesterday forsook the rigors of training for an all-day sight-seeing tour of the city.

Today will bring a return to the familiar grind of calisthenics, rope-skipping, shadow-boxing and actual glove wielding with Ray Ingram and Joe Teems, local boys on the receiving end. Klick's veteran sparring partner, Billy McMahon, will arrive Monday to catch for the remainder of the week.

Up early despite a late arrival from New York, Klick appeared well able to forego the more strenuous phases of work for the day, but he took the precaution of indulging in setting up exercises on the roof of his hotel before starting out.

Weighs 137 Pounds.

Klick is up to 137 pounds at the moment, just about where he should be at this stage of the game, but he'll come in around 133 pounds. He seems to be at tops from a physical standpoint, and mentally is ready to face a ringful of Canzoneris.

Regarding Canzoneri, Klick had plenty to say, and he didn't mince his words.

"Tony has slowed up just enough for me to catch him this time, and I'm confident I'll take him. He's still dangerous, but I intend to wear him down. I'm gonna keep right on top of him and keep throwing 'em, and I don't think he'll be able to stand the pace."

Carlen pointed out that his charge will be heavier than when he fought Ross last winter in Miami, which he believes will put more steam behind his punches. Carlen is dead certain that Klick injured his cause in the last fight by boiling down to the prescribed weight.

Two Clubs Added By Valley League

Staunton and Waynesboro Admitted Unanimously.

Harrisonburg, Va., May 31.—Staunton and Waynesboro were admitted to the Valley League here at a meeting of club officials from seven communities.

Entry of the Augusta County clubs completes an eight-club circuit. They made application after it was found impossible to revive the Augusta County League. Culpeper, Harrisonburg, Charlottesville, Orange, Front Royal and the Heurich Brewers, of Washington, voted unanimously to admit the two clubs.

President George Holtzman was instructed to draft a new schedule. The opening dates were agreed upon as follows:

Fails to Rule In Dropping Of Myatt

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, May 31.—Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis today tossed the big family quarrel between Manager Walter Johnson and third baseman Willie Kamm right back into the hands of Alva Bradley, owner of the Cleveland Indians.

Although the bedridden judge did rule, after a two-hour conference with the two adversaries, that Johnson was within his rights as club manager in banishing Kamm from the team, he refused to give an opinion as to the justification of the "Big Train's" drastic action in releasing catcher Glenn Myatt outright and indefinitely suspending Kamm "for the good of the club."

Johnson Is.

Johnson, warned by owner Bradley that he would be dismissed as manager if the commissioner ruled he had exceeded his rights as pilot, was jubilant as he left the Near Northside Hotel where the hearing was held. He refused to comment on the statement issued by the commissioner, but he wore a broad smile as he hurried away to Comiskey Park, where the Indians met the White Sox this afternoon. Kamm, however, was downcast, visibly worried about his future as a ball player, although he half-heartedly said he was satisfied with the results of the hearing which he demanded and got.

"I have no doubt but that I'm through as a Cleveland player," he told newspapermen later. "They'll probably trade me or sell me. Maybe, I'll land in a minor league. I'm going back to Cleveland tonight and have a talk with Mr. Bradley."

May Feel Effects.

Among Cleveland newspapermen traveling with the Indians it was agreed that Kamm never would play for Johnson again, but that the "Big Train" still might feel the effects of the controversy. Anyway, Commissioner Landis actually didn't decide on anything important, sending the decision as to the justification of Johnson's actions back to Owner Bradley. In his characteristically terse statement, Commissioner Landis said:

"In this situation, two honest men found themselves at loggerheads as the result, mainly, of what was said or was alleged to have been said regarding what each of them did or did not do in connection with the ball club. There is no suggestion against the character or repute of either of them. However, as a practicable proposition, it falls upon the manager to act in cases where even perfectly honest differences arise.

Speedway Race No Ordinary Sports Event; It's Like a Foreign Fiesta, Gallico Learns

By Paul Gallico.
A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, May 31.—There is no other show in the country that is like the Indianapolis Speedway race, because in the first place, there is nothing which draws as large a crowd spread out over as immense an acreage. One lap around the track is 2½ miles. There are some five or six holes of golf inside of it, and the 155,000 who attended yesterday scattered themselves all around the edges and clustered at the turns.

The huge track must be a little like the Circus Maximus in Rome. And the show and the people and the set-up remind one more of a European or Mexican fiesta than the ordinary American sport event. Against the explosive background of the speed wagons flashing by, one eats, wanders about, chats, visits friends, renews old acquaintances and partakes of the tremendous holiday spirit that grips this enormous crowd. Everybody is having fun. Everybody is good natured and excited.

The amount of food and drink consumed on race day must be simply staggering. There is more than a mile of grandstand, and every inch of the space underneath is taken up with booths selling hamburgers, hot dogs, potato chips, peanuts, pop corn, pickles, ham and pork, barbecued meats, beer, coca-cola, soda pop, sandwiches, candies and what-not. The air is heavy with the smell of cookery and you hear the cheerful sizzling of the meats and frankfurters frying.

In the grandstand and paddock boxes, around 1 o'clock, literally thousands of fried chickens and hard-boiled eggs are demolished. All the box-holders bring elaborate basket lunches, cocktails, highballs, beer, coffee. Rich and poor alike, each to taste and pocketbook, enjoy the doggonedest eating party you ever did see. From 12:30 to 2 o'clock, 155,000 jaws are munching away. The concessions must clean up a small fortune on that day. When the show was over, the infield directly in front of the press box was so littered with empty beer bottles that it was impossible to take a single short step without hitting one. Enough frankfurters to have circled the track 10 times around must have perished.

The most fascinating story of the whole race, of course, was Ralph Heburn driving the last 75 miles of the race with his mechanic unconscious beside him. Tearing along the track at speeds varying from 100 to 130 miles an hour, he had to hold the wheel with one hand and stretch across the body of his assistant and pump up the oil.

He had no way of knowing what his mechanic's condition was, but I doubt if he would have stopped had he turned and suddenly found the devil riding beside him. The toughest job he had was keeping the mechanic from being thrown out around the curves, and when hitting some of those rough spots. He accomplished this by holding him down with his right elbow.

Jilted Disqualified, Mazyniata Ruled Charles Town Victor

Daily Double Pays Off at $85.20

Jockey Garrett Is Set Down for 10 Days; Rival Crowded.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN RACE TRACK, May 31.—There was a jilting party here this afternoon. Officials jilted Jilted or Jilted jilted herself, according to the way you wagered, but the fact remains that the stewards had the last say when they ordered Jilted's "No. 7" removed from the top rack on the results board and moved Mazyniata's "No. 3" card into its place. Of course, that action brought Dixie Bee's "No. 2" to second and transformed Star Queen's "No. 5" from an also ran to a third horse.

All this shifting of signs made no difference to the old mare, Jilted. She had won a race here opening day and then she didn't expect much luck in life, anyway, what with having a father named Snob II and a mother named Rejected. Then, again, there wasn't enough people here to work up a good-sized booing.

Jilted's owner, W. Simpson, jr., put up some argument, but it was such a beautiful day. Jilted's jockey, Les Garrett, went up the stairs to hear the stewards place a 10-day suspension on him, but he was too tired to argue.

Mazyniata Is Crowded.

The situation involved something of a sleight of hand nature, they would have us believe, at the turn into the stretch. Mazyniata, which appeared to be a beaten horse at the time, was crowded when Jilted bore in. Jockey Hilley, riding Dixie Bee close by, was forced to stand up in his stirrups to escape a spill. The horses finally became untangled and after it was all over, apparently Mazyniata stumbled.

All three finished, with Jilted having a three-length margin over Mazyniata, but it would have made no difference if Jilted was in Hagerstown when Mazyniata came to the line.

The daily double paid an $85.20 mutuel and resulted from victories of Aglaia and Wise Money. The latter, a dull choice opening day, was an active long shot today.

Favorite Takes Opener.

Just because the horses marched to the post on time in the first race, Ethan Allen saw to it that they did not break from the barrier until six minutes of wrestling with an assistant starter. When the break came, he was high in the air and had no chance. Aglaia, the property of Mrs. W. C. Westmoreland, was backed into favoritism and galloped off with the honors. Little Fred and Idle Worker were second and third. The winner paid $4.20.

Flosilda, at a $3.20 mutuel, made a show of her field in the second race. The farther she went, the longer was her lead. Jockey Hilley was pulling up during the last furlong and still won by eight lengths from Bav and Transmac.

Ehresman's Record 67 Paces Philadelphia P. G. A. Golf Field

Walper's 75 Far Behind Leaders

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—Leading a general assault on par that saw the course record shattered three times, Clarence Ehresman, stocky Eagles Mere (Pa.) pro, posted a brilliant 67 today to go out in front in the Philadelphia P. G. A. invitation golf tourney.

The up-State shot-maker, principally through some splendid putting, ripped off eight birdies on his breath-taking round of 30—37 over the par 72 Llanerch Country Club layout to head the 50 low-scoring professionals and 20 low amateurs—survivors of a field of close to 150—into tomorrow's final two rounds of the 54-hole event.

In addition to Ehresman, two others—Sid Brews, the South African ace, and Leo Diegel, Philadelphia district pro—entered the select class under the old course mark of 70. Brews had a 68, one better than Diegel.

Contrasted to their brilliant form was the partial collapse of Henry Picard, the season's leading money winner pro from Hershey, Pa., and the touring Japanese squad of six.

Picard's drives were considerably off form, leaving him with a somewhat large 37-37—74, seven strokes back of the leader, while the best of the Japanese sextet were Jack Yusaki, with 38-39—75, and Tommy Miyamoto, with 39-36—75.

One round of 70 was written into the records—by Charley Lacey, Great Neck, Long Island, who fired a 32, 4 under par, on his out nine, and then slipped to come back with a 38.

Al Heron, Reading, Pa.; Felix Serafin, Scranton; Bud Lewis, Norristown; Al Keeping, Haverford, and Bruce Coltart, Philadelphia, remained in the running with 71's.

Some 21 in the field are qualified for the National Open next week. Among these, in addition to Ehresman, Brews, Diegel, Picard, the six Japanese invaders, and Serafin, were Wiffy Cox, Brooklyn veteran, and Ray Mangrum, of Los Angeles, each of whom turned in a 73 today; Ed Dudley, Ryder Cup player, with 74; Leo Walper, Washington, 75, and Gene Kunes, Norristown, 76. "Wild Bill" Mehlhorn, Louisville, Ky., pro, equaled the latter figure.

In the Japanese group, behind Yuaski and Miyamoto, were Benny Asami, with 76; Kanekichi Nakamuri, with 78, and Toiohro Toda, who exploded with 40-42—82.

Blair High Turns Back Poolesville Nine, 13-5

Montgomery-Blair High yesterday won its seventh game in 14 starts, defeating Poolesville High, 13 to 5, at Silver Spring. A 12-hit attack, led by Robertson, Turner and Johnny Orrison, featured the contest.

Eddie Thompson, starting Blair pitcher, was relieved by Patton after walking five men in the first inning. Patton fanned 10 and allow 2 hits in the five innings he pitched, being relieved by Canavan in the seventh. Cubitt, on the mound for the losers, fanned nine.

Stars Vie Here Today In National Marathon

Komonen Tops Field of 110 Men Seeking A. A. U. Crown.

STUDDED with the greatest running "names" in this country and Canada, including the defending champion, Dave Komonen, of Sudbury, Canada, the fourth annual national A. A. U. marathon will be run here today under the auspices of the Evening Star.

Although he appeared in perfect condition and quietly confident of retaining the title he has won for the last two years, Komonen last night admitted without hesitation that "it's going to be plenty toff." The little Finnish-born master looked with concern at the pretentious list of 110 stellar performers.

One of the Greatest.

No flash in the pan is this Komonen. With the exception of aging Clarence De Mar, he has won more major marathons than any other runner in the world. And even De Mar's enviable record of 20 victories will soon become a poor second, if Dazzling Dave can maintain his blistering pace.

In the team scoring, the United Shoe Machinery A. A. harriers, of Beverly, Mass., will be out to defend the laurels they garnered last year. This time the roster includes Cecil R. Hill, Clarence Sabine, Gordon Norman, Andre Brunelle, Walter Ray, Roy Kimball, George Dungin and John Kula. Despite their strength, the Machinists anticipate a real run for their money from the Monarch A. C., winners in 1932 and 1933.

Counted upon by the dopesters to make this a modern classic will be Pat Dengis, of Baltimore, who with Komonen is an even money choice. Mel Porter of the German-American A. C. of New York, who finished second last year, and Bill Steiner, recent winner of the Jewish Olympic crown.

Start at 2 o'Clock.

The Mount Vernon-to-the-White House course has been resurveyed by the A. A. A., the only important change carrying the runners out East Capitol street to Seventh street northeast.

The race will start from Mount Vernon at 2 o'clock; proceed to Memorial Bridge over the Mount Vernon boulevard; Memorial Bridge to Hains Point via the Speedway; Hains Point to Fourteenth street; north on Fourteenth to Constitution avenue, east on Constitution into Pennsylvania avenue; east on Pennsylvania to First; south on First to South Capitol hill, east on South Capitol hill to First street southeast; north on First to East Capitol; east on East Capitol to Seventh northeast; north on Seventh to B street northeast; west on B to Constitution avenue; west on Constitution to Pennsylvania; west on Pennsylvania to Thirteenth-and-a-half street; south on Thirteenth-and-a-half to E; west on E to Ellipse; around Ellipse to finish at the Zero Milestone.

Semifinalists Clash Today In Doubles

Smith and Wheatley, No. 1 Team, Face Test in Markey, Lynch.

By John R. Vosburgh.

A PAIR of former collegiate tennis stars, Bud Markey, who captained Notre Dame a few years ago, and Hugh Lynch, who captained Princeton even fewer years ago, will challenge the supremacy of the Middle Atlantic section's ranking doubles team, Alfonso Smith, of Charlottesville, and John Wheatley, of Norfolk, in the semifinal round of the Middle Atlantic doubles tournament at the Army and Navy Country Club this afternoon.

At the same time, on an adjoining court, another slam-bang semifinal battle will be in progress bringing together four of Washington's foremost players, Barney Welsh and Ralph McElvenny against Dooly Mitchell and Tony Latona. Both matches commence at 1 p. m., the finals to be played immediately afterward.

Three of the four teams gained their semifinal bracket in straight sets. Smith and Wheatley, the champions, dropped one set in their quarter-final engagement with Felix Silva and Mariana Erana, Filipino champs of Washington, Thursday.

Veteran Pair Upset.

In yesterday's matches, Lynch and Markey contributed the big surprise of the day by toppling the veteran duo of Tom Mangan and Bud Mathers with sease, 6—3, 6—2, 6—2, thereby substantially reducing the odds on Smith and Wheatley today.

McElvenny and Welsh were impressive in their viotcry over the veterans, H. Ritzenberg and Pat Deck, 6—4, 8—6, 6—1, and Mitchell and Latona rode into the round of four on an equally decisive triumph over Stanley Carr and Bill Breese, of the Chevy Chase Club, 6—4, 6—2, 8—6.

In addition to the prestige of their decisive victory over Mangan, for years at the top of Washington's tennis ranks, and his able Texas partner, who formerly played as partner of Wilmer Allison, Lynch and Markey go into their match today equipped with a style of game figured to furnish the Virginians with particular distress. Veteran observers point out that the young former collegians rarely resort to the lobs which give Smith and Wheatley their numerous scoring opportunities—in other words, bait for their powerful overhead. On the contrary, Markey and Lynch are content to volley it out or drive it out and a spectacular match today appears to be the result.

Rated As Favorites.

The Welsh-McElvenny and Latona-Mitchell fracas finds the No. 1 ranking player of the District, Welsh, on one side of the net and Latona, the No. 2 ranking player, on the other. While Welsh and McElvenny, finalists in the National Public Parks championships and No. 2 seeded team, rate clearly as favorites, the margin of choice is about as wide as the breadth of a racket string.

A. O. White, veteran umpire of the Capital section, will officiate in the final, with Tom Mangan, president of the Middle Atlantic Tennis Association, umpiring one semi-final and Joe Rutley, secretary, the other.

All in all, the day affords Washington fans with three of the fastest doubles matches they are likely to see here all year—a triple-header all of which well might go five sets apiece.

Salem, N. H., May 31.—Spixi, J. U. Gratton's consistent 3-year-old chestnut gelding, won the Salem Center Claiming Handicap today, beating Happy Knot and Carisbrooke in a driving finish to win the feature race at Rockingham Park.

In four previous starts here, Spixi had won twice and had finished second twice. Today, while a curtain of rain slanted down on the track, he showed his same stout courage in the home stretch, with Jockey O. Laidley giving him a riproaring ride.

Spixi was fifth in the field of six, allowing Happy Knot to set the pace practically the entire 5½ furlongs. At the head of the home stretch, he was still lagging, as Carisbrooke and Happy Knot fought it out up front, but with a last, well-judged drive, he won by a head over Happy Knot.

Flying Feet Skim the Barriers at Harvard

Let's Go Fishing . . .

By M. W. Meier.

YOU can catch bluefish now in Chesapeake Bay, provided you hit the combination of wind, tide and feeding conditions which those acrobatic, temperamental, piscatory battlers insist on.

For several days fair catches have been made above Southwest Middles and the fish ranged in size from 5 to 8 pounds.

Channel bass—red drum, if you please—also have been caught above Southwest Middles. We aren't sure, but we are informed the red fellows rarely enter the bay. The blacks are common during the season, but not the present species now hard on the heels of the blues.

Lands First Bass.

TO Carl Klein, Bureau of Engraving employe, goes the honor for landing the first black bass of the season from the Potomac in District waters. With a companion, he visited Hains Point at midnight. His fourth or fifth cast connected with a large-mouth, which weighed 2½ pounds. He was using a bucktail combination bait with a kidney spoon and pork-rind trailer on a single hook.

The Potomac has furnished some splendid sport the last few days, and, barring rain, tomorrow should witness some excellent catches. There are plenty of rocks available. Many have been caught on flies, off the spillway, just above Chain Bridge.

There are no end of sizable small and large-mouth black bass in District waters and anglers who know how to fish for them should have no trouble landing satisfactory bags. Calico bass are scarce this year, according to C. M. Capper, but the strawberry species is present in abundance. There also are plenty of good-sized pike—both the grass and duck-bill types. Some are readily caught in the canal. Minnows evidently are the best bait, but the devotees of artificial lures can easily get their share of pike.

Bay Fishing Only Fair.

DECORATION DAY rain more or less put a crimp in bay fishing yesterday, but if the skies remain clear, prospects for the week-end should be fine at most points. For some reason, however, the best catches are being made on the Eastern Shore.

Good catches of rocks have been reported the last few days from the Severn, Susquehanna and the mouth of the Potomac. The big fellows are still running small but the big fellows are expected daily.

The best fishing nowadays undoubtedly is along the Del-Mar (Va.) shores. Blues, channel bass, weaks, croakers, kings and sea bass are fairly abundant anywhere from New Jersey south to Cape May.

The holiday saw practically every ocean shore resort in the above area packed to capacity, with all boats taken.

Ocean City, Md., is now in the spotlight for bluefish, hundreds of them being caught almost daily from the schools now headed North.

The bulk of the crowds fishing at Wachapreague seems more concerned over weakfish and croaker fishing in the inlet and channels than in the splendid channel bass and blue fishing available off the adjacent coast. Only a few men have been working the surf for channel bass and none at all for blues. Those who tackled the channel bass were rewarded with large catches.

Weaks are running rather large at this favorite fishing spot, from 5 to 9 pounds being the average size. Fresh squid is the only bait they will seem to take, and, fortunately for anglers, this is easy to obtain at the docks there.

Oregon Inlet seems to have been absolutely passe the last week. The fish have stopped biting and probably will not show up again for a week or two. Right now the schools seem to be off Maryland and Delaware.

he asked. "Here we've lost four straight and we're only six games out of the lead. That shows how fast things can happen in this pennant race. All the leaders are cutting each other's throats and there's a fine chance for a club to slip in there.

"Newsom's injury puts us right back where we were two weeks ago—short on pitchers, but I still have some hope that we can manage to stay in the race until he returns. Hadley has gone the route in his last three games, and Whitehill will always give us a pretty good game. Bobby Burke has one puzzled, but I want another look at Ed Linke before I count him out. And I'm gonna give young Coppola another starting job before long. But from now on Pettit is strictly a relief pitcher. I'll know more about Russell after tomorrow."

Maryland Parkers Annex County Title

Newman Stars in Victory Over Mt. Rainier.

Aided by the superlative all-around play of their ace pitcher, Newman, the Maryland Parkers yesterday gained the Prince Georges County High School championship in a thrilling 7-6 battle with Mt. Rainer High.

Trailing at 5 to 6 in the ninth inning, Newman cracked out a single to center to score Nelvin with the tying run. He then stole second and third. Visibly shaken by Newman's brilliant work, Pitcher Stott of Mt. Ranier faltered and Newman came home on a balk.

Stocks Tumble With Comment By President

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—After holding ground stubbornly most of the session in the face of the French financial crisis, the stock market ran into a burst of selling late today following President Roosevelt's comments on the Supreme Court NRA decision.

Liquidation in equities was touched off in the last hour, brokers said, in part by the swift decline in cotton which was ascribed to the Chief Executive's intimation that if the Supreme Court's opinion should block Federal control of agricultural output, it would result in lower prices for cotton.

Apart from this specific comment, it was pointed out, the President's remarks were somewhat unsettling to markets generally in so far as it was not made clear what the next move of the Administration would be.

A loss of 3,166,000,000 francs in gold was reported for the week by the Bank of France. Inasmuch as this brought to $858,000,000 the amount of gold lost by the Bank of France since the outflow started around March 29, Wall Street observers expressed doubts over the ability of France to cling to the free gold standard much longer.

Measured by the Associated Press average of 60 stocks the market closed .4 lower at 40.9. Transactions totaled 1,125,070 shares compared with 1,494,260 on Wednesday.

Wheat Is Lower On AAA Crisis

Possibility of 36 Cents a Bushel Is Hinted by Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 31.—Lower prices for wheat today followed reports President Roosevelt viewed the Supreme Court's NRA decision as a national reversal to the horse and buggy era.

Attention of traders focused especially on the fact that the President was reported as indicating the Supreme Court's opinion, if it blocked any Federal control of agricultural production, might result in 36-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton under present world conditions. With heavy selling pressure in evidence toward the last, May and July wheat reached a new low price record for the season.

Talk of a possible squeeze in the month-end settlement of May corn contracts fizzled completely.

Wheat closed weak, ⅜@⅞ lower than Wednesday's finish, July 84@84⅛; corn, unchanged to ¾ higher; July, 78⅝@78¾; oats, ⅛ off to 1 cent up, and provisions varying from 2 cents decline to a rise of 30 cents.

Part of the late selling of wheat and other grains was attributed in some quarters to talk of likelihood of the Winnipeg fixed minimum price for wheat being lowered. Provisions ruled irregular with grains, and averaged lower at the last.

Market Moves Of the Day Seen In Brief Review

What the Stock Market Did.

	Fri.	Wed.
Advances	132	167
Declines	417	472
Unchanged	157	147
Total issues	706	786

Stocks—A break in cotton following the President's comments on the possible effects of the NRA decision, together with the French political and monetary crisis, resulted in a burst of selling which carried stocks generally lower. The volume of transactions, 1,125,070, was slightly lower than on Wednesday.

Bonds—Interest was lacking in the bond market and prices slipped to lower levels. Utilities were firm, but Governments eased off. The volume of trading receded to $8,641,000.

Curb—Stocks closed irregularly higher despite a late selling flurry. Metals and specialties were firm. The volume, 252,000 shares, compares with 301,000 on Wednesday.

Grains—The White House view of what might happen if Federal control were lifted from agriculture—36-cent wheat, for instance—caused selling pressure, with wheat the weakest feature.

Cotton—Under the heaviest general selling since the mid-March break, cotton prices tumbled $3.10 to $3.35 a bale, after the President's comments on the agricultural outlook were published. The October option dropped to 10.64 and the general market closed with net losses of from 61 to 67 points.

Coffee—Quotations remained unchanged, with Rio No. 7 selling at 6⅞ and Santos No. 4 at 8¼.

Constitutionality of Several Securities Exchange Act Sections Questioned on Basis of Schechter Case; Financial District Expects Early Tests.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, May 31.—While the financial district has been chiefly preoccupied this week in discounting the more direct effects of the Schechter decision upon business profits and security values, keen interest has been aroused also in its implications for the future of security market regulation. Lawyers specializing in practice under the Federal securities act and the securities exchange act have been deluged with queries as to whether any portions of these two enactments may be held unconstitutional in a future test case.

The prevailing view appears to be that the Federal securities act would meet successfully a test as to its constitutionality. On the other hand, serious doubts are entertained about certain sections of the securities exchange act of 1934, which not only provides for detailed regulation of stock exchanges and over-the-counter dealers, but also lays down certain requirements for listed corporations and their managements. It is reliably reported that several test cases have been considered, and that one has had considerable preliminary preparation.

Licensing of Exchanges Fundamental Issue.

The key provision of the securities exchange act is the licensing of stock exchanges. The constitutionality of such licensing is based primarily upon the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The law bars any unregistered exchange or its members from using the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect its transactions.

The fundamental question raised as regards this provision is whether the great mass of intrastate transactions conducted upon a stock exchange can properly be subjected to regulation by a Federal commission through this indirect device of barring exchanges from the use of the mails and means of interstate commerce where they do not place themselves under such regulation. If sections 5 and 6 of the act, which provide for such registration of national securities exchanges, can not be upheld, then the whole system of Federal regulation that has been applied under this law will collapse.

Particular doubt is expressed by some lawyers concerning the power of the Securities and Exchange Commission to regulate floor trading practices on stock exchanges, as is provided in section 11 of the act. Here the law applies to transactions which mainly originate and are consummated within the particular locality where the exchange is located. This applies in particular to the bulk of the business of specialists, odd-lot dealers and floor traders. The activities of such members, now subject to close regulation by the SEC, can affect interstate commerce only quite indirectly, it is argued.

A similar contention is advanced with regard to the vital section 9 of the act, devoted to the prohibition of manipulation of security prices through various practices and devices. Here again, it is claimed that a mass of purely intrastate transactions are being regulated on the ground that interstate commerce is indirectly affected. On the other hand, the margin provisions of the law are believed to have a firmer constitutional basis as part of Federal regulation of the banking system, which in turn derives from the power of Congress to regulate the value of money.

Question Requirements as to Directors and Officers.

Even if the provisions of the securities and exchange act relating to stock exchanges and their members should be upheld by the Supreme Court in future test cases, even more serious doubts are expressed concerning the validity of the sections of the act which call for reports from corporate directors, officers and owners of 10 per cent of any class of list equity security. Also, such sections of the law as that subjecting the giving of proxies to vote listed stocks to rules and regulations of the commission are held questionable, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court to draw a definite line between Federal regulation of interstate commerce and of transactions which affect interstate commerce only quite indirectly.

The SEC is understood preparing to hand down within the next few months a series of regulations governing the "pegging, fixing or stabilizing" of prices of particular registered securities. This will affect a variety of operations of this kind, in both newly issued and old securities, that are once again being conducted rather commonly in the financial districts. Should these regulations be rigid or burdensome in character, it is understood that they will be tested without delay.

Another early test is promised if the SEC should undertake to extend its over-the-counter regulations in such a way as to injure the business of such dealers. It is now understood that the regulations recently promulgated for registration of over-the-counter dealers were preliminary in character, and were designed primarily to gather information as to the number of houses in the business and the nature of their accusation. The unlisted debts, because of the local character of the bulk of their business in most cases, now feel that they are in particularly good position to challenge the constitutionality of the act.

Herron Points To Gains Made By Washington

Local Banker Addresses D. C. Convention at Hot Springs, Va.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Hot Springs, Va., May 31.—Frank D. Herron, of the Union Trust Co., and chairman of the commercial trade activities for the District of Columbia Bankers Association, gave high praise to the business progress that has been made in this country during the last 18 months, at the second session of the association's annual convention here today. He laid particular emphasis on the advances made by Washington.

He declared that although by comparison this country has made slower progress than have many other nations, a lack of confidence rather than definite physical factors has constituted the greatest hindrance.

"In its relief work alone," he said, "the Federal Government has accomplished a gargantuan task and done much to check and lessen the ravages of six years of the worst depression and unemployment that have ever been experienced in this country, and the world."

He pointed out that more than twenty million people, one out of every six of the population of the United States, have shared in the bounty distributed by the Government. The group of five and one-half million individuals on relief rolls leads the list of unfortunates whose welfare depends on Federal aid. Next is an aggregate of 1,770,000 who are on relief work under the FERA, while 324,000 have found refuge in the CCC. Two hundred and fifty thousand are engaged in PWA work. The total aided is about half of the actual idle workers of the country. Private enterprises and permanent Government departments employ approximately 39,000,000 workers.

Earnings Up 64 Per Cent.

"Earnings of industrial corporations on the basis of profits reported by 1435 leading firms during 1934 increased 64 per cent over 1933," he said. "Estimates by leading authorities in the machinery industry agree that there is need today for 18½ billion dollars worth of new machinery, enough to give full-time work to 2 million men for 2 years. Replacement of obsolete locomotives alone would involve the spending of $2,750,000,000. This is regardless of replacements of equipment on farms and in homes."

He said that business failures, one of the most reliable indexes to business progress, had decreased 40 per cent in number and 47 per cent in amount during 1934, as compared with the year previous.

"Conditions in the automobile field industry are probably more improved than in any other field," he said. "Production during 1934 totaled $1,453,000,000, an approximate increase of 100 per cent over 1932 and 50 per cent over 1933."

After presenting a resume of the country as a whole, Mr. Herron turned to the progress that has been made by the District of Columbia during the same period. Outstanding in the performance turned in by local business during the year 1934, he referred to advancement of building construction. "During the 12-month period," Herron asserted, "Washington's total outlay for new building was exceeded only by New York. All other large cities turned in lesser totals."

Vacancies at Low Point.

Vacancies in apartment houses in the District on May 1 were 75 per cent, the lowest average in the country, he said. "Vacancies of office space on the same date were 4.2 per cent, the lowest average for this classification in the country."

Notwithstanding the charges of excessive rent in the city, Mr. Herron quoted a survey made by the real estate legislative committee showing that in the year preceding January 1, 1935, the increase was 0.2 per cent.

"Sales of new cars in the city increased 28 per cent during 1934 to a total of 18,433," he declared. "More than half of this figure have already been sold in the first four months of 1935."

In conclusion, Mr. Herron said that no prediction could conscientiously be made at this time on the ultimate effect of the Supreme Court's NRA decision. His opinion, however, was that freed from the restraining hand of the governmental agencies, industry should move to still higher levels. He recommended, however, that the "certain elements of good," including working hours and the minimum wage, be retained.

Eccles Gives Informal Talk.

Hot Springs, Va., May 31.—Marriner Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve Board and honor guest at the convention, gave a short informal talk at the close of the morning meeting.

Bridle paths and golf courses were the chief points of interest between meetings for member bankers' associations and their wives who are here.

During the morning sessions, when delegates were closeted in the convention hall, wives and daughters took part in their annual golf and putting contests. Today, after the golf rounds, the annual ladies' luncheon was held at the nearby Cascades Club, followed by a bridge party.

Points of interest near to Hot Springs also drew a large proportion of the more than 200 taking part in the convention. Horse and rig transportation furnished by the hotel carried many through the nearby jungles adjacent to the torrential Jackson River.

Others either hiked or drove the three miles to Ingalls Airport, located on the level top of a mountain. This field, at an elevation of more than 3,000 feet, is one of the highest air fields on the Atlantic Seaboard. Another favorite spot was the Cascade Gorge, whose water wells out of the ground near the fifteenth green of the Homestead golf course.

New Haven Plans More Zephyr Trains

New York, May 31.—The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad is considering the construction of two lightweight oil-electric trains to be operated between Boston and New York, if its experience with the Comet, a train of this kind, running between Boston and Providence, is satisfactory.

U. S. Gold Rises To 8.8. Billions, All-Time Peak

Week's Shipments From Abroad Swell Total by $73,000,000.

Heavy incoming shipments of gold caused the monetary stocks of the yellow metal to record the sharpest rise in many months during the week ended May 29, an increase of $73,000,000 during the period bringing the total to $8,835,000,000, the highest peak ever recorded.

This was revealed by the weekly condition statement of the Federal Reserve Board, which showed the latest total is $1,059,000,000 in excess of the comparable period of last year.

Money in circulation gained $30,000,000 during the week, but reserve balances, which have been increasing rapidly, showed an upturn of only $6,000,000 for the week. The condition statement said:

"The daily average volume of Federal Reserve bank credit outstanding during the week ended May 29, as reported by the Federal Reserve banks, was $2,475,000,000, a decrease of $1,000,000 compared with the preceding week and an increase of $1,000,0000 compared with the corresponding week in 1934.

"On May 29 total Reserve bank credit amounted to $2,467,000,000, an increase of $8,000,000 for the week.

"This increase corresponds with increases of $64,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks, $30,000,000 in money in circulation and $6,000,000 in member bank reserve balances and a decrease of $5,000,000 in Treasury and national bank currency, offset in part by an increase of $73,000,000 in monetary gold stock and a decrease of $24,000,000 in non-member deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts."

Bond Issues Slip Downward

Governments Ease Off as Interest Lags; Utilities Firm.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—The bond market lost its hold and slipped lower today when traders and investors showed no disposition to bid for securities and small offerings found a scarcity of buyers.

Utility bonds, the only bright spot in the last several sessions, appeared tired, and with few exceptions rested around Wednesday's closing levels. Rails were inclined to easiness and industrials retreated rather early for a time, but slowed up before the close. U. S. Governments ended three thirty-seconds to seven thirty-seconds lower.

Just what effect President Roosevelt's discussion of the NRA case had on the investment market was problematical because many of the street's leading traders had stretched the Memorial holiday over to Monday, and institutional participation in the market has been negligible since hasty readjustments were completed right after the Supreme Court upset NRA.

Transfers aggregated only $8,641,000, par value, compared with $8,988,000 on Wednesday. The Associated Press averages were unchanged to six-tenths of a point lower for all domestic groups, while ten foreign bonds averaged two-tenths of a point higher.

C. & O. Will Purchase $11,000,000 Material

Cleveland, May 31.—The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway today invited bids for five heavy high speed modern passenger locomotives, 5,000 steel hopper coal cars, 62½-ton capacity, 50 stock cars and 75 flat cars. The total probably will cost approximately $11,000,000. Financing has been done by equipment trust certificates sold in usual markets and not by PWA. The locomotives will be 4-8-4 type, with boosters, extraordinary large fireboxes nad boilers and steam capacity capable of high speed with heavy steel pasenger trains.

The powerful locomotives are to operate the George Washington.

Selling Wave Breaks Cotton $3.35 Per Bale

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—Cotton broke $3.10 to $3.35 a bale late today to the lowest levels since April 6, under what was said to be the heaviest general selling since the mid-March break. The pressure followed publication of statements by the President to the effect that the Federal Government may not be able to regulate agriculture. October declined to 10.64 with the general market closing easy at net losses of 61 to 67 points.

Early in the session the market rallied to net gains of 15 to 19 points on trade buying and covering with contracts relatively scarce after recent liquidation. The President's remarks, indicating that under a strict interpretation of the court's NRA decision defining interstate commerce, agriculture can be considered as intrastate and outside the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, were the signal for unusually active selling.

The further statement that abandonment of crop control would mean sharply lower prices attracted widespread attention in the trade. Final prices were at the lows for the day. Weakness of other markets added to the selling pressure.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—Trading was quiet on the stock exchange today pending developments in France and the United States. Prices eased early in the session, but the tone brightened later, with gilt-edged securities and gold mining shares heading a slight improvement, the latter on Paris support. Dealings in bonds were slow due to the news from the Far East. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Traders on the Bourse were watching the political situation closely today. Prices were firm and trading active. Rentes scored gains ranging from fractions to more than a point. French industrial shares also rose actively along with Belgian issues. The market closed firm.

Berlin—Traders recovered their intermediate losses at a cheerful opening on the Boerse today. The closing was inactive but sustained.

Virginia Bonds Go at Premium And Low Rate

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 31.—Virginia officials tonight pointed with pride to the State's credit rating to the sale today of $1,000,000 worth of certificates of indebtedness at 2 per cent to a financial combine, which was willing to furnish a premium of $7,399 in addition to its low rate of interest.

The ten-year certificates were purchased by a syndicate composed of the First National Bank of New York, Halsey Stuart & Co., of New York, and Darby & Co., of New York, against 14 other bids. In all, 51 financial firms were united in the bids, which had a narrow interest range of between 2¼ and 2 per cent.

Governor Peery said that the eagerness with which the certificates were taken "is fine evidence of the financial standing of the State. We are gratified at the result."

The certificates were sold to refund $1,000,000 in Robertson act road bonds, issued in 1926 and carrying 4½ per cent interest. With the premium reduction, the interest rate on the certificates during the ten-year period will be 1.926 per cent, affording a saving of approximately $225,000 to the State.

The winning bid today was .534 per cent better than the 2½ per cent rate given the State on an identical refunding issue a year ago.

State Treasurer A. B. Gathright said, "it shows the fine standing of the Commonwealth and the high regard for its certificates. We believe it is the lowest rate given any State on bonds for a similar period."

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — Going Home — By Harry J. Tuthill

Going home! Oh how often I looked forward to this moment, while we were marooned on that dismal island and... George, what are you thinking about?
Who, me?
I'm just wondering how many relatives will grab bathing suits and start running south if they hear too much about Ches having money?
You mean I shouldn't say anything about my own brother?
We'll feel very funny if the next time we run down to see Ches we're met by a posse of relatives, who give us hours to leave.
Ha, don't worry about me ever going back to that swamp.
In a few weeks, if we're not careful, that island will be the largest tourist camp in the world and your brother will spend most of his time refereeing a family reunion and...
I wonder what time we'll get home? Home! Ah!

The GAME of LIFE

By Priscilla Wayne

MAMA opened the door and they entered a large, beautiful room. It was light inside, warm and cozy.

"These," Mama said, "were Eleanor's rooms. There is her picture."

They went over to stand before a huge, life-sized painting of a lovely, aristocratic woman. "Ted loved Eleanor with all his heart," Mama said, and there was not a hint of jealousy in her voice.

"He'll always love her. She was a beautiful, gracious woman and a good woman. When she died, Ted said that life just ended for him. He went on his with his work. He loved his profession. He was already a rich man, you see.

"But he closed these beautiful rooms and when he thought of Eleanor at all it was reverently, with awe. He should have thought of Eleanor as a human being, with joy even, that she had lived and blessed his life."

Ellen gazed at Rose Hardesty with awe. This was a phase of her mother's character she had never dreamed existed.

A Fine Philosophy.

"She had a desperate disease. She couldn't live. She was glad to be released. Instead of dreading these rooms, closing them, Ted should have opened them. He should have lived in them.

"Don't you see, dear? He should have smiled up at her beautiful picture and been glad that she'd been released from pain. He had beautiful memories. Whatever, after life, there is in store for the best in earth's pilgrims, he knew that she would inherit. Don't you see, my dear?

"Grief shouldn't be a closed door. Open it. Life goes on and on—and memories, after all, may be beautiful as well as tragic."

Tears welled into Ellen's eyes. "You mean that baby Mike——"

"Yes, dear. It's all part of a long pilgrimage of life. There'll come a day when you'll remember his brief, sweet life with tears of gratitude. And you'll even be glad that the great Creator released your baby."

Happiness to Come.

"You mean — if he had gotten well——"

"The specialist told us that if your baby had lived he could never have walked. His little legs would have been twisted and stunted by the disease. There'll come a day, Ellen, when you'll thank God that He took your baby. That will be when your strong, healthy children play about you. You'll go back to Michael and back to the little house——"

"But he doesn't want me, Mama——"

"How do you know, dear?"

"He knows that I'm in town. He hasn't called. He hasn't tried to see me."

"You've been harsh and cruel, Ellen. You haven't been your real self. Maybe if Michael saw the real you again—the girl that you were before your own mother changed you into a jealous, suspicious——"

"Mama—don't Mother Confesses.

"Yes, I will say it, Ellen. I've been a mean, selfish, exacting woman. Sorrow makes some people understand the real meaning of life. But it didn't make me understand. I just grew more critical and more exacting and more selfish. It took happiness to make me understand."

"Happiness?"

"Yes, happiness. You're going back to Michael, dear. You're going to bury your false pride. If you ever loved him, then you love him still. If he ever loved you, then he loves you still. Don't you see, dear?"

"And with the memory of little Michael—no, Ellen, you and Michael could never be happy apart, after what you've been to each other."

Would Call Mike.

She determined to call Michael. To ask him to come and talk it over with her. More than anything she had ever wanted in all the world, Ellen knew that she wanted Michael and his love.

It made her very tender to poor Ben Milford. All the time she had been away he had written letters of encouragement, friendly, chatty letters. But Ellen could read beneath the lines. She knew that Ben Milford loved her. And in a way she cared for him. If there had never been Michael——

She tried to tell Ben that, one evening.

He had come to her with great news. "I've got a promotion. Next year instead of being coach in high school, I'm to be supervisor of physical education over the entire city. I'm to have a good salary raise and prospect of continued advancement. I can get married, Ellen. I'll be able to support a wife. I love you, Ellen, I—I want you."

Ellen smiled, tenderly. She cared for Ben Milford. If Mike did not stand in the way—she tried to tell Ben these things, gently.

No Hope for Him.

"You told me, Ellen, once that you meant to divorce Michael."

"That was when I felt differently about things, Ben. I still care, I hope Michael still cares. But, even if he doesn't, I couldn't ever change."

"Then you mean—there isn't any hope?"

"No, Ben. You're going to go ahead in your work. You'll love it and you'll make good. Then one of these days you'll marry Inez, that girl of yours back in Minneapolis. You'll realize that you've always loved her."

"I'll always love you, Ellen," Ben said miserably.

"You think that now. We've both been lonely and we've had good times together. We've loved our tennis practice and our interest in the same things has made you think you care, Ben, more than you really do."

Work Is Finished.

And Ben knew in his heart that perhaps this queer, beautiful girl, who had been wife and mother, spoke the truth.

It was hard to get into the right humor to telephone Michael. Several times Ellen tried. Once the line was busy and she sighed in a panic of relief.

What if she asked him to come and see her and Michael said coldly that he did not care to come? That thought kept Ellen away from the telephone for hours.

The work was over at the Bensons. "I'm sorry," Mrs. Benson said. "If any more work comes up we'll call you, but you see for yourself that this is all."

Visited His Family.

And then it was even harder for Ellen to call Michael. She had failed in the professional tennis contract. She had lost her steady position at Bensons', even if through no fault of her own, and she had searched unceasingly for work—but with no success.

It seemed to her that Michael would think that she was turning to him just because she had lost out every other place.

She visited Dr. John and Mary, when she was certain Michael would not be at home.

Mike's parents had aged. There was no denying that Dr. John's hand trembled when he shook hands with her. Mama had told her that he'd been obliged to give up his operating. That, she felt, must be a bitter thing indeed, for, of all his work, Dr. John probably loved his surgery best.

Mary was gentle and cordial. She did not ask Ellen about Michael, did not once seek to probe into Ellen's affairs.
